74th Congress Meets, Kills 'Discharge' Rule; President Talks Today

4,000-Word Message of Roosevelt Guarded From 'Leaks.'

Byrns Is Elected Speaker by House

'Militant Program' of G.O.P. Stirs Attack of Robinson.

By Robert C. Albright.

A new Congress, ready to jump at White House command, yesterday moved quickly through routine opening ceremonies, clamped down an iron lid on recalcitrant House minorities, then turned expectant eyes toward President Roosevelt and the message he will deliver personally at 12:30 o'clock today from the House rostrum.

A perfunctory opening, enlivened by the curious gay throngs that packed the galleries, a colorful mingling of new and old faces and the "rebel yells" of Southern Democrats greeting selection of Josepn W. Byrns as Speaker, marked conventional convening of the two Houses.

G. O. P. Provokes Attack.

Hopelessly outnumbered in House and Senate, Republicans entered the session with a militant program phrased by House Minority Leader Bertrand H. Snell that quickly provoked critical reverberations on the other side of the Capitol. Senate Democratic Leader Joseph T. Robinson led the attack with the label "childish."

A 4,000-word message, surveying the field of Administration "achievements" and discussing generally the New Deal's legislative objectives, will be presented by the President to both chambers meeting jointly in the House this afternoon, and carried to the country over national radio networks.

Secrecy About Message.

With only his most intimate advisers in his confidence, Mr. Roosevelt yesterday delivered the final strokes to the message that will start the legislative ball rolling down Capitol Hill. Carefully shielded against any "leak," the message is expected to level a broadside at unemployment and outline the President's reasons for the switch from direct to work relief. More credit for small industry, NRA reorganizations and utility regulation yesterday figured broadly in Hill speculation.

This outline will be followed up with specific proposals at the White House tonight, in conference with congressional Democrats. Budget balancing aims will be set forth in a second message to be sent to the Capitol Monday.

"Discharge Rule" Killed.

The House stole the spotlight at yesterday's opening session, holding members in continuous session until the now famous "discharge" rule under which any 145 members could force a bill out of committee, was thrown in the scrap heap by a 242-to-167 vote. The coup carried White House indorsement, strengthened the hand of House Democratic leaders, and effectively greased the runway for Administration measures. Leaders answered minority cries of "gag" wtih a substitute rule, permitting a simple majority of 218 members to force legislative action via the petition route.

Noted "Gallery Gods" Present.

Entertaining features of the lower chamber opening attracted Mrs. Roosevelt to the House galleries. She is expected to drive to the Capitol with her husband today. Wives of Cabinet members and Administration officials joined the usual gathering of House "gallery gods." Mrs. Longworth, "Princess Alice" of the recent Republican regime, occupied a front seat.

On the Senate floor, Postmaster General Farley and Col. Marwin H. McIntyre, of the White House secretariat, moved informally among chatting members.

"We will meet each legislative proposal with open mind; judge

10 Firemen Injured In Baltimore Blast

Explosion Follows Blaze in Theater District.

Baltimore, Jan. 3 (AP).—Ten firemen were injured seriously tonight as an explosion from a blaze they were fighting in a shoe store in the theater district hurled them from the building into the street.

Fireman George Seward underwent an emergency operation as soon as the injured men were taken to a hospital. His condition was given as critical. The lower part of his body was badly cut by glass. The cause of the explosion was not determined.

Mrs. Ida K. Luber, manager of the store, told officials she discovered the fire when she opened a door to the rear of the store. She said she saw a dense cloud of smoke near a fuse box. The fire soon was brought under control.

Merit Tests Asked by Sirovich For 100,000 New Deal Workers

'Nobody Knows Why Some Job Holders Are Here,' Congressman Charges; Bill Would Put All but Key Men on Civil Service.

By Douglas Warrenfels.

Civil service examination would be required of 100,000 persons now employed in New Deal emergency agencies under a bill to be introduced in the House shortly by Representative Sirovich (Democrat), New York.

Passage of the measure would jeopardize the jobs of virtually all employes in the NRA, AAA, PWA and other comparatively new Federal units. The proposal, despite its origin in Democratic circles, may prove a menace to what Republicans have assailed as the most far-flung spoils system since the Civil War.

Sirovich described his bill as a "precedent-smashing omnibus measure" calling for strengthening of the merit system along lines "never tried before by any government in the world." He said he hoped to engineer its passage as chairman of a special Civil Service subcommittee.

"President Roosevelt," he added, "has been very fair in seeing that both Republicans and Democrats were employed in the emergency agencies. Nevertheless, there are all kinds of men in the Federal service. Nobody knows how or where they got in. All kinds of games are played now in getting appointments.

"No injustice will be done to any one. We simply feel that the best qualified men should get the jobs on the basis of mental and oral tests. I want to make clear, though, that the key men in the emergency agencies would not take the test."

Sirovich complained over the political set-up under which members of Congress spend several hours a day interviewing men and women in search of Federal berths.

"This bill," he declared, "would prevent each Congressman from being an errand boy for from 100 to 200 people who come in every day looking for an appointment."

Another outstanding clause of the New Yorker's measure would extend to the Government the collective bargaining guarantee for employes of private firms contained in section 7(a) of the recovery act. He explained the Fed-

Patman Asks Bonus Action; 2,400 Bills Up

Immediate Payment Plan Ranks First on House List of Measures.

A revised cash bonus payment proposal was outstanding among more than 2,400 bills introduced yesterday at the opening of Congress.

The measures ranged from inflation to a compulsory 30-hour week plan. Senate and House committees will conduct hearings shortly on many of the bills.

House resolution No. 1, the revamped bonus proposal of Representative Patman (Democrat), Texas, would provide for immediate payment. Its chief difference from a similar legislative proposal of Patman at the last session was the so-called "safety" article, which would give the Secretary of the Treasury discretionary authority to "contract" currency or withdraw as much money from circulation as the total of the bonus payment if necessary to prevent inflation—termed in the bill "undue expansion."

Patman predicted the measure would be passed. He said he had received pledges of 350 affirmative votes in the House.

"I'm sure we could pass is over a Presidential veto in the House."

U. S. Debt Up By 12 Billions In Four Years

Soaring Deficit Threatens to Top Roosevelt's 32 Billion Limit.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

During the last four years the Federal public debt has increased $12,452,576,837, the Treasury revealed yesterday. This sum may be regarded as the cost of the economic depression to the Treasury since January 1, 1931, and the end to an increasing public debt is not yet in sight.

Some idea of the enormity of this increase in the gross public debt may be obtained from the fact that since the beginning of the Christian era approximately 1,000,000,000 minutes have passed. Thus the debt figure would represent $12 for each minute ticked off since the birth of Christ.

If the increased debt were evenly spread over the four-year period it would mean that the Treasury went into debt at the rate of approximately $23,000 a minute.

Gross Debt $28,478,663,924.

The Treasury revealed yesterday that the gross public debt on December 31 was $28,478,663,924, as compared with $16,026,087,087 on

Standard Oil Orders Layoff To Escape Huey's New Tax

Will Curtail Its Refining Operations in Louisiana; 5-Cent-Per-Barrel Levy Due to Become Effective January 8.

New Orleans, Jan. 3 (AP).—As Huey P. Long prepared to leave his Louisiana "empire" to "ram" his share-the-wealth program through Congress, the Standard Oil Co. of Louisiana announced plans for curtailing its refining operations in this State to escape the "Kingfish's" 5-cent-per-barrel tax on the manufacture of oil.

The company's announcement came as the first tangible reaction to enactment of Long's latest dictatorial laws by his humble Legislature.

Senator Long disclosed plans for journeying to Washington Saturday from his palatial hotel suite here this morning, but then was "out" to all callers and could not be reached for comment regarding the Standard Oil Co.'s plans.

Officials of the company said an "orderly lay-off of employes" at its huge Baton Rouge plant would begin immediately, and that a portion of the plant's refining equipment would be moved.

The decision to curtail operations, the announcement said, was made following a meeting of company officials with the employes' council. The plant normally employs approximately 3,000 men.

The tax on the refining of oil was enacted during the closing minutes of the third special session of the Louisiana Legislature in 1934, and was aimed directly at the Standard Oil.

State officials have estimated that the tax would yield between $2,500,000 and $3,000,000 annually. Oil men have said that most of the tax would come from the Standard Oil. The oil tax is scheduled to become effective January 8.

Huey to Broadcast A Cancer Cure

New Orleans, La., Jan. 3 (U.P.).—Senator Huey Long said tonight that Louisiana State University doctors had discovered a cure for cancer and that he had bought Radio Station WDSU in New Orleans for $100,000 to broadcast the cure to the world.

He gave no details of the discovery, but said he would make a speech about it on the floor of the United States Senate Monday night.

The Kingfish has been talking about his "university of the air" for several weeks. Political observers believed he would make it a propaganda machine, with which to campaign for the Presidency in 1936.

It was understood that the $100,000 would come from a special State fund set aside for expansion of the university. The fund was provided in a new law which Long jammed through the Legislature last month.

Long denied he would use the station to make political speeches. He has, however, been using WDSU to broadcast his speeches for more than a year.

Fahnestocks In Court Tilt For Children

Two Girls Guarded in Mansion; Father Holds Custody.

Butler Balks Marshal Seeking to Serve Adkins' Writ.

The two small children of the socially prominent Mr. and Mrs. Snowden A. Fahnestock were being guarded in a Massachusetts avenue mansion last night while husband and wife prepared to battle in court for their possession.

In the District Supreme Court Mrs. Fahnestock, who was Helen Moran, charged yesterday that her husband had illegally removed the children from a train at Union Station while they were on their way from Aiken, S. C., to the Todhunter School in New York, of which Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt is a founder.

She charged further he had taken the children, Clara, 7, and Mary Lee, 6, to the home of his mother, Mrs. Gibson Fahnestock, 2311 Massachusetts avenue northwest.

Process Server Balked.

Justice Jesse C. Adkins issued an order requiring the elder Mrs. Fahnestock and her son to produce the children in court this afternoon and answer the mother's petition.

However, last night a deputy United States marshal, M. L. Senes, was unable to serve the order. A butler said the Fahnestocks were not at home.

The palatial home on Massachusetts avenue was surrounded by private detectives yesterday and last night. Their task apparently was to see that the children were not removed. Not knowing who they were, however, many persons in the neighborhood called up police headquarters and complained about the "suspicious-looking" characters lurking in the neighborhood.

Wife Asks Divorce.

The fight for possession of the children came as a prelude to divorce action.

Mrs. Fahnestock, great-granddaughter of Matthew Morgan, first American Minister to Russia and member of a prominent New York family, started the proceedings yesterday in Newport, R. I. She charged extreme cruelty.

Mr. Fahnestock had a brilliant military record in the World War, having succeeded Maj. Whittlesey in command of the famous "Lost Battalion." He still is a colonel in the New York National Guard.

The couple was married in Newport June 15, 1925, at a small wedding in Red Cross Cottage, the Moran summer home, by a judge of the State Superior Court before which the divorce suit is now filed.

Husband to Ask Custody.

Subsequently Mr. Fahnestock built a large house on the ocean drive called Ker Aror.

Attorney Godfrey L. Munter, who, with Attorney John L. Kratz, will represent Mr. Fahnestock in the legal fight here, announced last night that he expected to file a petition with the District Supreme Court asking that Mr. Fahnestock be given formal possession of the two little girls.

The petition would ask further, he said, that the children be allowed to stay here at the home of their grandmother.

On top of that, Attorney Munter said, he would ask the court for an injunction requiring the mother of the children to remove the detectives who surround the Fahnestock mansion.

Reporters were told that three of the detectives had been employed by Mr. Fahnestock, but this Attorney Munter denied.

"Barred By Servants."

Mrs. Fahnestock's petition asking for possession of the children was filed by Attorney Arthur J. Phelan, of the office of Hogan, Donovan, Jones, Hartson and Guider.

It told of her plans for a divorce and represented her husband as saying that if she went through with her plans, he would "never permit" her to have the children.

After she learned that the children had been removed from the train here en route from Aiken, the mother said, she hurried to Washington and went to her mother-in-law's home.

The servants recognized her, she said, but refused to open the doors. In her suit, which was in the form of a writ of habeas corpus, Mrs. Fahnestock said she was certain the two were being "unlawfully detained" in the grandmother's home.

"Gross Neglect" Alleged.

The husband, according to the suit, is an "incompetent and improper" person to have the "custody and control" of minor children. Further, it was alleged, he might remove the children from the city, or take them out of the country so that none of the courts here could compel their return.

Mr. Fahnestock was accused of "grossly neglecting" the children. He has gone "for long periods of time" without seeing them or displaying any affections toward them, it was charged.

The wife said she was "in fear she would be continuously denied access" to her children. There might be attempts made, she asserted, "to destroy the natural love and affection" which the children have for her because of her close association with them since the rift between herself and her husband.

Mrs. Lindbergh's Testimony

(Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.)

Flemington, N. J., Jan. 3.—The following is the transcript in part of the testimony of Mrs. Anne Morrow Lindbergh today:

Direct examination by Mr. Wilentz—

Q. Mrs. Lindbergh, you're the wife of Charles A. Lindbergh?—A. I am.

Q. And where do you reside, madam?—A. My legal residence is in East Amwell Township, Hunterdon County. I have been living in Englewood, N. J.

Q. When you say East Amwell Township in Hunterdon County, you mean the home which you occupied in March, 1932?—A. I do.

Q. Now specifically referring to March 1, 1932, you were then living in and occupying the home in Hunterdon County, were you not?—A. I was.

Q. And will you please tell us on the first day of March, 1932, about the household?—A. The occupants of the household?

Q. Yes.—A. I was there myself and my son, Charles A. Lindbergh, jr., Mrs. Elsie Wheatley, her husband, Oliver Wheatley, and later in the afternoon, Betty Gow.

Q. So that the household on that date consisted of yourself and also Col. Lindbergh in the evening?—A. In the evening.

Q. And Mr. and Mrs. Wheatley and Betty Gow and your infant son?—A. Yes.

Q. How old was he?—A. Twenty months.

Betty Gow Arrived in Afternoon.

Q. Now referring specifically to that Tuesday, you were there all day?—A. All day; yes, sir.

Q. And your son was there all day?—A. Yes, he was.

Q. Did you leave the premises at all that day?—A. I left for a short walk in the afternoon, after Miss Betty Gow had arrived from Englewood to take care of the baby.

Q. Did you walk alone?—A. I went alone.

Q. And about how long were you away?—A. Not very long; I could not definitely say, about 15, 20 minutes, perhaps half an hour.

Q. And when you returned were Mr. and Mrs. Wheatley and Miss Gow at home?—A. They were all at home.

Q. And the child?—A. And the child.

Q. Will you tell us what you did for the rest of the afternoon and how you spent your time?—A. After my walk, I went up into the baby's bedroom where I found Miss Betty Gow and Mrs. Wheatley. Then I went down again, I think, into the sitting room. About 5 o'clock I had the baby down in the sitting room playing with me. He left me to run into the kitchen. After that I did not see him until I went up into the nursery about 6:15 or after, when he had almost finished his supper. From that time on for about an hour or a little more than that, I was with the baby, helping to dress him and prepare him for bed.

Says Baby Was Perfectly Normal.

Q. Now, during the afternoon, as I understand it, you stated that you were with the child and the child was playing around. Will you tell us about the child, about his playfulness of that day. Was he a normal child?—A. He was perfectly normal.

Q. Healthy?—A. He was very healthy.

Q. Playful?—A. He was a great deal better than he had been the preceding two or three days when he had had a slight cold.

Q. Was he able to talk yet?—A. He talked.

Q. To what extent, Mrs. Lindbergh?—A. I don't remember any particular conversation on that afternoon. Of course, he called for all the members of the household by name, and he played about the floor with me in the living room.

Q. Did he understand when he was addressed, understand what was being said to him?—A. He did.

Q. And did he know the toys by name? And his food, was he able to tell about his cereal and his toys and things of that kind, that took up his immediate life?—A. Is that a question?

Q. Yes, ma'am.—A. Yes.

Q. Will you tell us, please, what was the color of his hair?—A. It was light golden.

Q. Was it curly?—A. It was curly.

Q. And the color of his eyes, please?—A. Blue.

Q. I'll show you a picture and ask you if that is

Col. Lindbergh's Testimony

(Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.)

Flemington, N. J., Jan. 3.—Charles A. Lindbergh, sworn as a witness on behalf of the State, after preliminary questions and answers, testified:

Direct examination by Mr. Wilentz—

Q. On March 1, 1932, what time did you return to your Sourland Mountain home?—A. I arrived about 8:25 in the evening.

Q. And when you got home, will you tell us briefly from there until about 10 o'clock what happened?—A. I came by car, arriving about 8:25.

Q. By the way, did you drive yourself?—A. Yes, came alone. I put the car in the garage at the west end of our house. From there, I went in through the kitchen and joined my wife at supper in the dining room on the west end of the main section of the house on the lower floor. We left supper about 9 o'clock, went from there into the room adjoining the dining room, which we call the living room of the house, on the lower floor. We sat on a sofa there for about five or ten minutes, approximately. From there, we went upstairs to our room and continued our conversation there.

I then went into the bathroom, took a bath, came downstairs, went into the library, which is on the east end of the main part of the lower floor of the house, sat down at a desk next to the southeast window in that library and began reading.

Q. All right, sir. Now just one moment. Would you mind standing up, please, Colonel? (Witness steps before the map on the wall.)

Reading on Floor Below Nursery.

Q. The library that you refer to, therefore, is the library shown on exhibit S-4, the eastern corner of it—that is, the southeasterly corner of the house?—A. That is correct.

Q. And the window alongside of which this writing table was placed is the window immediately under the sash window, I think they call it, of the nursery?—A. Under the sash window on the east side.

Q. The south sash window on the east side?—A. That is correct.

Q. And while you were there did you have a clear view of the window that was right alongside of the desk?—A. I was sitting beside the window. The window was open, or rather the window was closed, but the shutters were open.

Q. The shutters were open?—A. The shutters were open and no curtain was drawn.

Q. The window panes were visible to you?—A. Yes, of course.

Q. You could see through them so far as the darkness would permit?—A. As far as the darkness permitted, yes.

Q. Prior to that time you had been in the living room, had you not?—A. Prior to that time I had been upstairs, and prior to that time in the living room.

Tells of Hearing Noise.

Q. Well, some time during that night did you hear some sort of a noise or crash?—A. Yes, I did.

Q. About what time was it and where were you?—A. Sitting on the sofa in the living room during the 10 or 15 minutes after we had come into the living room from the dining room. At that time I heard a sound which seemed to me, at the time, the impression that entered my mind at the time vaguely was that it was like the top of—well, say, an orange box, the top slats of an orange box falling off a chair, which I assumed to be in the kitchen.

Q. That is, sort of like the falling of a crate, a wooden crate?—A. The slats of a crate.

Q. At any rate, what you felt was happening was that some piece of wood, like the slats of a crate, had fallen in the kitchen?—A. That is correct. I did not pay very much attention to it at the time, but enough to remark to my wife the words, "what is that?"

Q. And except for that, it went unnoticed?—A. Yes.

Q. About what time was that?—A. That would be about 9:10 or 9:15.

Q. Was it the sort of a noise that would come with the falling of a ladder?—A. Yes, it was, if the ladder was outside.

Q. Finally, at about 10 o'clock in the evening

Hauptmann Fails To Show Emotion

State Declares Kidnap Ladder Broke, Baby Died in Fall.

(Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.)

Hunterdon County Courthouse, Flemington, N. J., Jan. 3.—Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh today told a sympathetic world—a world which had waited 30 months for the story—about the murder of their son.

They told it calmly—displaying that same courage which enabled them to live sanely through the tragedy.

Thirty feet across the courtroom from them sat Bruno Richard Hauptmann, on trial for his life. He was the same granite-faced prisoner today that he always has been, but when court recessed at 4:07 p. m., his clothing was damp with perspiration.

If this man is guilty, he took part of his punishment today.

Tears were shed, but they didn't come from the eyes of Anne Morrow Lindbergh. Not even when Attorney General David T. Wilentz walked slowly toward the witness chair and held before her a torn and stained scrap of cloth—the shirt which on the evening of March 1, 1932, she wrapped around the child she never saw again.

Silence Engulfs Courtroom.

Her hands trembled, but she gulped back her grief, paused a moment and said:

"Yes, that is the shirt."

Somewhere in court a woman gasped and handkerchiefs fluttered out of purses.

Justice Thomas W. Trenchard, who has seen a 100 men on trial for their lives and has listened to grief-stricken mothers testify for 20 years, swept his eyes with his right hand to fight back a tear.

For 15 seconds silence literally engulfed this courtroom.

Hauptmann came into the courtroom the same nerveless figure he has been since his arrest in the Bronx months ago. He was a drab figure between two brightly uniformed State troopers.

The testimony of the Lindberghs, however, awakened his interest.

When the attorney general carried the sleeping garment sent to Dr. Condon as a "token," Hauptmann gazed intently on the exhibit. His face, however, betrayed not the slightest emotion. He appeared intently interested in the same impersonal way as the 200 spectators who listened to the testimony.

His demeanor was unchanged when Lindbergh testified.

Talks With Wife.

When court was adjourned, the prisoner's wife, Anna, who had moved from a wall to a place at her husband's counsel table, engaged him in low, animated conversation in German for two minutes.

Mrs. Lindbergh's mouth was a thin, firm line under a black hat that tilted over her nose, and she lifted her right hand, indicating she was ready to proceed.

For 40 minutes she stayed on the stand. Then Wilentz turned to Edward J. Reilly, defense counsel, and said:

"The witness is yours."

Reilly said:

"We have no desire to cross-examine Mrs. Lindbergh."

And then—for the first time today—she smiled, and it was at the lawyer who is defending the alleged murderer of her son.

Reilly bowed.

When a prosecution lawyer called out, "Col. Lindbergh, please," the tall aviator covered the 30 feet to the witness chair in eight strides and began his testimony in a firm, loud voice.

Lindbergh Testifies.

It was the second such ordeal for him, for he testified in Washington, against Gaston B. Means, who went to prison for extorting $100,000 from Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean on the promise that he could effect return of the Lindbergh baby who already was dead in New Jersey.

Lindbergh told, again the story that now has become familiar

All Is Peaceful, Ickes Declares, Despite Rumor

Report President Asked Resignation of Aids Again Is Denied.

(Associated Press.)

Smoke continued yesterday to surround the question of friendly relations between Secretary Ickes and others high in the Administration, but efforts to find the fire were circumvented by a fresh circle of denials.

At the White House is was reiterated that the President had not asked for the resignations of two of Ickes' aids—Ebert K. Burlew and Louis R. Glavis—but no attempt was made there to deny that some hint that it might help matters if the pair left may have come from "the White House."

At a press conference, Ickes late in the day asserted that "no one at the White House, or outside," had even hinted at the resignation of Glavis and Burlew.

Denies Report Prepared.

Furthermore, he said no report was being prepared on these two men.

However, the smoke persisted, and the conviction remained that some one close to the President is inquiring into activities by Burlew and Glavis as a result of dissatisfaction over their attitudes.

Secretary Ickes, independent and a hard fighter, kept Burlew in office as administrative assistant as a holdover from the last Administration. He is standing by him. Glavis is the Interior Department's director of investigations.

The Interior Secretary has been in frequent conflict with other Administration heads. So far he has almost always had the hearty backing of the President. One notable tilt was with James A. Moffett, director of the Housing Administration.

Enemy Coalition Rumored.

A coalition of Ickes' enemies has been rumored. Officials who declined to be quoted said it was entirely possible that Mr. Roosevelt may yet be called on to clarify the relations of Ickes and his aides with other New Deal forces.

The Secretary of the Interior indicated he felt the original story of the rift had been planted. He said those who wrote it did so in "good faith."

Simultaneously Ickes said he had received a letter from Attorney General Cummings complimenting the work of Glavis' men in apprehending oil code violators in the East Texas field.

Pepper Gets Notice He Must File Bond

Treasurer-Elect Directed to Qualify by January 8.

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Anne Arundel County commissioners today served notice on Republican County Treasurer-elect Joseph H. Pepper that he must qualify by filing prescribed bond by noon January 8.

Although the treasurer does not take office until May, under a local law he is required to post bond within 30 days after election, and in event of failure to do so, the commissioners are empowered to declare the office vacant and name a successor. This time limit has expired, but county authorities have been inclined to construe the law as directory rather than mandatory.

Pepper, in the meantime, has been sworn by Clerk of Circuit Court Frank A. Monroe and said that he would post bond in due time. In addition to the $40,000 county bond, the treasurer is required to give bond to the State in a greater amount, so that his total bond aggregates $100,000.

Between You and Me

'The Greatest Deliberative Body'; Baby Senator Waits; the Chivalrous Democrats.

By Raymond Clapper

The identity of the person who first called the Senate the greatest deliberative body on earth is lost in the shades of legend, but it is certain that he never picked up the idea from sitting in the gallery on an opening day, at least one like yesterday was.

Hands of the clock come together at noon and a little man with white hair, blue eyes and a red face raps for order, but the conversation, laughter and the occasional thud of backslapping goes right on. The Senate of the United States is in session, but is not yet aware of it. The little man continues to hammer with the determination of a small boy driving a nail. Eventually, one by one the Senators drop into their chairs.

Democrats are massed on one side in a huge, oversized majority which gives them the appearance of a mob. On the other side a handful of Republicans are huddled, surrounded by bare expanses of unoccupied floor space, the remnants of the last massacre. Is it a Democratic trick to give the Republicans an inferiority complex?

Even this corporal's guard is torn by internal dissension. On the back row sit the two lads, La Follette and Nye, and Borah, Shipstead and Norris. Ahead of them are Johnson, Frazier, Couzens and Cutting. All of these are scornful of the Grand Old Party. Some of them worked for the election of the Democratic President. Two of them—Johnson and La Follette—came back with Democratic help. All would be more at home with the Democrats than with the Republicans.

* * * *

On the back row of the Democratic side are a dozen newcomers as solemn as owls, even the man Bilbo, dressed up in gates ajar collar, large horseshoe tiepin and a gardenia as large as Carnera's ear. He is one of the first up the line to be sworn in. As he returns to his seat he pauses to put an indulgent pat on the husky shoulder of Senator Robinson, majority leader, and stops to accept congratulations from Postmaster General Farley, who, in blue shirt, business clothes and spats, has dropped in informally to survey the spoils, if that's the word, of his recent election victory.

Next to Bilbo sits young Holt, in a plain suit and blue shirt. He looks young enough to be in college. Six months too young to be a Senator, he does not answer when the clerk calls his name. He hears it, apparently, but after a momentary pause, resumes his conversation with Bilbo. He will present his credentials on his thirtieth birthday in June. Meantime, as West Virginia's Senator-elect, he is by Senate rules permitted to be on the Senate floor though he may not debate or vote.

The Democrats present themselves, each on the arm of his colleague. Minton, of Indiana, dark and handsome like some movie actor whose name doesn't come to mind; long, lean cadaverous Honest Vic Donahey, of Ohio, who may not have been chewing gum but appeared to be; Joseph F. Guffey, short and proud-chested as he has a right to be since he is Pennsylvania's first Democratic Senator since the Civil War, and the two Senators from Washington State, Bone and his new colleague, Schwellenbach, wearing blue business suits, large white carnations and tan shoes.

Mingling about shaking hands is M. H. McIntyre, White House secretary. A few years ago he sat in the press gallery. Now he is on the Senate floor telling the new members to come in and see the President anytime.

Finally, Senator Wheeler, of Montana, obtains permission to send a note to the chair. It is read to the Senate. Huey Long, still in Louisiana, wants it announced that on Monday he will speak to the Senate concerning certain matters mentioned in the newspapers—including, presumably, the Administration hint that Federal money might be withheld from Louisiana unless Long changed his program there. Everybody laughs. But the time may come when Huey won't be so funny. He has ceased to be a joke in Louisiana.

* * * *

The Senate was not impressive yesterday. There was nothing deliberative. It wasn't any more dignified than a king getting out of bed, sleepy-eyed, in the morning. Still the Senate has its great moments. Occasionally it utilizes its opportunity as one of the few legislative chambers left in the world where real discussion of public matters can take place, where any member can rise and speak as long as his breath holds out. Time and again its investigations have uncovered and checked careless or worse officials. Wild at times, erractic, always doing the unexpected, the Senate is in the long run the real balance wheel of government. It is when it is hard at work in the daily grind that the Senate is impressive.

* * * *

Democrats in the House were in a chivalrous mood yesterday. When the Democrats proposed Byrns for Speaker, the Democratic side rose and applauded, but the Republicans sat glued to their seats. When Snell was proposed as the Republican candidate, a purely honorary mention, his opponents on the Democratic side rose with the Republicans to give a hand to the leader of the minority. It was a nice gesture but it doesn't mean anything. After the President's message is out of the way the Democrats will undertake to make sausage meat out of Snell.

* * * *

As a husband who pays the household bills, Chairman Arthur E. Morgan, of TVA, is well satisfied with what the Government is doing in the Tennessee Valley. He is living in a seven-room house at Norris, Tenn., which is equipped with electric heat, and all of the appliances such as an electric range, water heater, vacuum sweeper and laundry equipment. His last monthly bill, including heating, was $16.90. Next to the bill, the best thing about it is that Chairman Morgan doesn't have to carry out the ashes each morning before he starts his planning work.

* * * *

After the Speakership election was over, Snell, as the defeated candidate, made the speech introducing the new Democratic Speaker to the House. He was a little excited and as he began to soar in the rhetorical heights, his tongue twisted.

"There's a silver cloud in every lining," Snell said. At first the silverite inflationists thought he was taking a dig at them.

Dr. Coupal Dies; Was Physician At White House

Native of Massachusetts; Was Officer in Army Medical Corps.

Dr. James F. Coupal, 50, former Army medical officer and White House physician during the Coolidge Administration, died at Walter Reed Hospital yesterday after a week's illness. He was found unconscious in his apartment Saturday, suffering from a cerebral hemorrhage.

A native of Quincy, Mass., Dr. Coupal had been a practicing physician in Washington since shortly after the expiration of the administration of President Coolidge. He was a recognized specialist in the treatment of cancer.

Practiced in Boston.

Dr. Coupal practiced medicine in Boston early in his career and in 1915 was commissioned a lieutenant in the Medical Reserve Corps of the Massachusetts National Guard. He saw service on the Mexican border, and was given a captaincy in the Medical Corps of the Army in 1916. After having served with distinction in France, he was commissioned a major in the Regular Army in 1919.

When President Coolidge appointed Dr. Coupal to the White House he was assistant curator at the Army Medical Museum. During the fatal illness of Calvin Coolidge, jr., he was one of the attending physicians, and later was physician to Col. John Coolidge, father of President Coolidge, when he died in Massachusetts in 1926.

Opened Private Practice.

Dr. Coupal was promoted to the rank of colonel by an act of Congress in 1926. In July, 1929, he resigned his commission in the Army to open a private practice here. He resided at the Chastleton Hotel, and maintained his offices at 1424 K street northwest.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Martha Wilfret Coupal; his mother, Mrs. Mary Coupal, and three sisters and two brothers, all of Massachusetts.

Funeral services will be held at Walter Reed Hospital tomorrow at 9:30 a. m. Burial will be with full military honors in Arlington National Cemetery.

Cases Continued In Prince Georges

Judge Ill, Police Courts Are Closed.

The Prince Georges County police courts were closed yesterday as word was received at Upper Marlboro that Judge Waldo Burnside was confined to his home with grippe.

Miss Loretta Ridgely, assistant clerk of court, said Judge Burnside would not return for at least one week. No move has been made to appoint a temporary judge, it was said.

The Capital Heights court was called yesterday morning by Clerk Thomas Henault and all cases continued. The same procedure will take place today in the Upper Marlboro court, Monday morning at the Laurel court and Monday afternoon and Wednesday at the Hyattsville court.

Egg Prices to Rise; 'Drought' Held Cause

Chicago, Jan. 3 (AP).—The big drought of '34 may come home to the American breakfast table in higher priced omelets in '35.

Eggs are rolling to market in volume sharply diminished from the supply a year ago, and poultry authorities here anticipate a relative scarcity this spring in laying hens and their product.

Chicago market authorities said today that Middle Western egg collections, a direct index of production, have been running 20 to 50 per cent below last year since October.

Tariff Board's Duties Changed

Work Altered by Recovery Act, Commission Says in Report.

The Federal Tariff Commission, making its eighteenth annual report, pointed out yesterday that its duties have been altered materially by the natonal industrial recovery act, which expires in June.

Measures for the control of various imports, including cotton rugs, lead pencils and red cedar shingles, were instituted during the year after investigations carried on under section 3(e) of the recovery act.

This section authorized President Roosevelt to restrict imports in cases where the Tariff Commission determined that NRA code provisions endangered American business in competition with foreign trade.

In addition, the commission has been active in compiling information for use in negotiating foreign trade agreements. Most notable report of 1934 concerned sugar, forming the basis for a reduction in the duty rate, the report said.

Bates Chosen For Mt. Rainier Council Place

Mayor-Elect Pruitt Picks Volunteer Fireman as His Nominee.

Mayor-elect Norman A. Pruitt of Mount Rainier has announced that he will nominate Arthur J. Bates to be councilman from the First Ward immediately after he takes office next Monday.

While the mayor's nominations are not binding on the council, there seems little doubt but that council will confirm the Bates nomination. Under the town charter the council can only consider such persons as the mayor may nominate in filling vacant council seats.

The First Ward seat, which has been held by Pruitt since 1927, automatically becomes vacant with his elevation to the mayoralty post, to which he was elected December 28.

Bates has been a resident of the town for many years and has been an active member of the Mount Rainier Volunteer Fire Department, of which he is deputy chief, a post which he has held for the past eight years.

While he has never sought public office, Bates has taken an active interest in town affairs. His nomination to be a member of the council is expected to win approval.

The new mayor also hinted that there will be several changes after he takes up the reins of town government.

Pruitt will succeed former Mayor John H. Beall, who resigned early in December to become judge of the Orphans' Court of Prince Georges County.

Ritchie Faction Seeks Fair Job

Democrats Lined Up With Republicans in Tangle at Hagerstown.

Hagerstown, Md., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—An unusual situation has developed in the contest for election, to be held tomorrow, of new officials of the Hagerstown Fair Association.

At last November's general election the Democratic faction which opposed the re-election of Gov. Albert C. Ritchie threw most of its support to Republican candidates and succeeded not only in defeating Ritchie in the county, but also contributed to the defeat of Democratic county candidates.

An aftermath of the general election was injected into the Fair Association election when Harold F. Bester, vice president, placed in nomination Rev. Clarence Wolfe and William Cunningham, both affiliated with the anti-Ritchie faction. Immediately members of the Ritchie faction placed in nomination Dr. E. W. Ditto, jr., in opposition to Bester for the vice presidency.

But at the election tomorrow the Ritchie faction is lined up with the Republicans in an effort to defeat Bester, Wolfe and Cunningham.

There is no opposition to Andrew K. Coffman, who was nominated for president to succeed himself.

Longley, Physician, Dies.

New Orleans, Jan. 3 (AP).—Dr. Rhodes Longley, 45, a leading physician of Fond du Lac, Wis., who served as chief surgeon of the American Expeditionary Force in Siberia from September, 1918, to March, 1919, died here last night after a year's illness.

'Strange,' Say Nudists Of Smith's Opposition

New York, Jan. 3 (AP).—The International Nudist Conference struck back today at the Advisory Council of the Legion of Decency and said "it is strange indeed" to find Alfred E. Smith in the role of a crusader against nudism.

The former Governor is chairman of the advisory council.

Movie Magnate's Wife Brings Divorce Action

Hollywood, Jan. 3 (AP).—Jack L. Warner, vice president of Warner Brothers' Pictures, Inc., was sued for divorce today by Irma S. Warner, who charged desertion. They had been married 19 years and have a son, Jack, 18.

Attorney DeForrest Home, who filed the complaint, said a property settlement had been made.

Firehouse Bids Set at Glen Echo

Construction Due to Begin About February 15.

Construction of a new firehouse for Glen Echo, Md., will be started about February 15, it was announced yesterday by the Conduit road fire board. The board today is advertising for bids for the contract, which will be publicly opened and read January 18 in Glen Echo.

The new engine house will be built with the proceeds of a $20,000 loan and grant from the Public Works Administration. It will be a two-story brick building. The first floor will house the fire apparatus as well as a kitchen and dining room. On the second floor will be a dance floor, auditorium and stage.

Henry T. McCuen, Mayor of Glen Echo and president of the fire board, states that the new $20,000 fire house project will bring the total amount of PWA expenditures in the town to approximately $40,000. The town already has spent about $20,000 on street improvements, he said.

7 Fishermen Adrift On Ice Cakes in Lake

Barrie, Ont., Jan 3 (AP).—Seven fishermen were set adrift on ice cakes in Lake Simcoe tonight when strong winds broke up the ice. The provincial police reported they were in no immediate danger and planned to remove the men when the wind subsides.

A party of three men was stranded on a mile-long cake in Shanty Bay, nearly a mile from shore. Another party of four was adrift on another cake off Hawkestone, about a mile from shore.

Buell Snyder, of the Twenty-fourth Pennsylvania Congressional District, comprising Somerset and Fayette counties, has announced the students nominated by him to take the examination on Februrary 13 for entrance to Annapolis Naval Academy. They are Charles H. Bennett of Belle Vernon, principal; Oliver G. Getty, of Myersdale, first alternate; John Divrio, of Windber, second alternate; William Kraton, of Fairchance, third alternate.

Mrs. Hoch died of pneumonia after an illness of about two weeks. She is survived by her husband, now the chairman of the Kansas Utilities Commission; a son, Wharton Hoch, of Wichita, and a daughter, Mrs. Jean Hoch Saylor, of New York City.

Jeweler's 'Customer' Flees With $650 Ring

A tall man came into Isaac N. Oppenheimer's jewelry store at 903 F street northwest yesterday and asked to look at some diamond rings, Mr. Oppenheimer told police. The rings were spread out and Mr. Oppenheimer turned to get some more.

When he turned back, the prospective customer was gone. So was a platinum ring valued at $650.

Session Opens, Waits Message Of Roosevelt

G. O. P. 'Militant Program' Arouses Attack by Robinson.

each recommendation on its merits, regardless of its political effect," the Snell pronunciamento announced. At the same time it opposed "this extravagent, bureaucratic government"; favored immediate restoration of full legislative functions and State powers; demanded budget balancing, sound money, freedom of the press, protective tariff, veterans' legislation and social measures of the unemployment insurance and old-age pension type.

Robinson Makes Retort.

"Insofar as the statement criticizes legislation passed during the present Administration, it should be pointed out that the few Republicans now in Congress for the most part supported the legislation," Robinson quickly retorted. "In all probability, that was the controlling reason why they are still in office and were not defeated along with their associates."

Senator Vandenberg (Michigan), Republican, heartily indorsed the Snell outline, but Senator Norris (Nebraska), Progressive Republican, declined comment on "that conglomeration." Senator Byrnes (Democrat), South Carolina, declared it full of "generalities and conflicting principles."

The Senate missed the presence of Senator Huey P. Long, but from his Baton Rouge home, the "Kingfish" contrived to claim his part in the opening Senate performance through a telegram relayed to the chair by Senator Burton K. Wheeler, of Montana.

"Please announce or have announced for me in the Senate that on Monday or on the first day that the Senate is in session next week, as soon as I can obtain the floor, I shall speak on the propositions heretofore mentioned in the public press, with which I am identified," his message read.

33 Senators Take Ooath.

It was said he will take this opportunity to reply to President Roosevelt's suggested revision of Huey's Louisiana State "empire" bills.

Thirty-three Senators in cutaway coats, 12 of them making their first appearance, took the Senate oath. The dozen new faces included Senators Bilbo, Mississippi; Burke, Nebraska; Donahey, Ohio; Gerry, Rhode Island; Guffey, Pennsylvania; Maloney, Connecticut; Minton, Indiana; Moore, New Jersey; Murray, Montana; Radcliffe, Maryland; Schwellenbach, Washington, and Truman, Missouri. Twenty-nine-year-old Senator-elect Rush D. Holt, of West Virginia, watched from the floor. He will not take the oath until June, when he reaches the legal age of 30.

A eulogy of Byrns by Minority Leader Snell, an adversary in politics but firm friend in private life, preceded administration of the Speaker's oath to Byrns in the House.

Byrns Paid Tribute.

Snell became a little rattled when he mournfully referred to his "Every lining has its silver cloud," shrunken Republican minority, he transposed.

Arc lights glimmered, cameras clicked and a hoarse shout arose as Representative Adolph Sabath, of Illinois, administered the oath to Byrns. From the gallery above, a motherly little woman, in a pink gown, and black coat, adorned with an orchid corsage, threw a kiss. It was Mrs. Byrns.

Representative William B. Bankhead, of Alabama, who as floor leader will work with Byrns to curb a bolt toward inflation, $200-a-month old-age pensions, and a too enthusiastic bonus program, was not present. He is ill with a cold at Naval Hospital. He received a measure of consolation from his chief; President Roosevelt has a cold, too.

Traced by Car, Transient Held As Girl's Killer

Confession Made in Murder of Nellie Runyan, Prosecutor Says.

Morgantown, W. Va., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Within a short time after Loran Croston, 31, was brought to the Monongalia County Jail here today from Wheeling, John Sanders, prosecuting attorney, announced that the prisoner had confessed to the slaying of Nellie Runyan, 24, of Moffett, Pa., the night of last October 7, in a lonely Cheat Mountain road, 10 miles from Morgantown.

Croston was arrested a few hours earlier at a transient home in Wheeling by State police who broke into his room while he lay asleep. Mystery shrouded the identity of the slain young woman and the manner of her death after the discovery of her body in a shallow grave on Cheat Mountain. She was identified by the dress she wore and the arrest of Croston came through identification of the car he allegedly used the night of the slaying. The car was found on Tyler Mountain, 20 miles from Charleston.

Croston admitted driving the girl from Morgantown, stopping the car about 10 miles out and emptying his revolver at her, the prosecutor said, declaring the woman had attempted to "get" money from him. Sanders said Croston would be held for Federal grand jury action.

Percentage of Insolvent Is Lowest in Carroll

Westminster, Md., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Carroll County has the lowest percentage of persons unable to liquidate their obligations of any county in Maryland, it was revealed in a report today by L. C. Burns, secretary of the county debt conciliation committee.

It was disclosed that since committees were appointed by Gov. Ritchie about a year ago, to negotiate with creditors in reducing obligations of persons whose debt exceeded their assets only 14 such cases had been brought to the attention of the Carroll County committee. According to Mr. Burns, 4 out of the 14 cases have been settled.

Seven Houses in Ruins After Fatal Snowslides

Campbell River, B. C., Jan. 3 (AP).—Two snowslides which crashed down on a small fishing settlement on Cape Mudge left C. L. Shaw, 66, a fisherman, dead and seven houses in ruins today.

The slides were believed to have resulted from heavy snow, followed by mild weather. Provincial police assisted in providing shelter for the homeless.

Dr. Leonard Hughes Dies.

$500,000 Paid U. S. by Mexico For Damages

Instalment Is First of Total Expected to Reach $7,000,000.

Mexico's payment of $500,000—the first money received from that government in settlement of damage claims since Civil War days—was received yesterday at the State Department, according to the Associated Press.

The check, which the Mexican Embassy deposited, represents the first annual installment on a sum expected to total $7,000,000. It is in full settlement of damage claims which accrued during the Mexican revolutions from 1910 to 1920.

It represents the first cash received from Mexico since 1868, when a previous claims settlement was effected. Under the terms of a lump-sum settlement arranged last April by Ambassador Josephus Daniels in Mexico City, Mexico agreed to pay damage claims at the rate of 2.65 cents on the dollar on an estimated total of about $300,000,000. The ratio was the average Mexico had agreed to pay to five European governments for damages to their citizens during the same period.

Senator King (Democrat), Utah, planned to press legislation to set up a domestic claims commission to pro-rate the money received from Mexico to legitimate American claimants.

Arrangement of the lump-sum settlement for revolutionary claims still leaves pending settlement of all general claims which date from 1868 and represent losses sustained by Americans during times of peace in Mexico. These claims, however, are counterbalanced by Mexican claims against the United States on which a commission already is working.

Clerics Back Student In War Training Fight

Topeka, Kans., Jan. 3 (AP).—Prominent Topeka pastors lent their support to Raymond McMahon, 20-year-old Kansas State College student, at a hearing in district court today on his application for an order to enjoin college authorities from requiring him to take military training.

Dr. Charles M. Sheldon, widely known minister and author, and Dr. Harold C. Case, pastor of the First Methodist Church, both testified in McMahon's behalf, while the Rev. Maynard Van Dyke, of the Unitarian Church, appeared as McMahon's next best friend.

Singing Waiter Doomed If Union Has Its Way

St. Louis, Jan. 3 (AP).—The singing waiter, revived by repeal, is clearing his throat for a swan song in St. Louis, if waiters' union, local No. 20, has anything to say about it.

"If a man is a waiter, he's a waiter," according to Harry Cordes, union secretary. "If he's a singer, he's a singer. We can't recognize any such thing as a combination. It's degrading to the union waiters."

Mrs. Vanderbilt Enters Appeal For Allowance

Gloria's Mother Seeking an 'Adequate Sum' to Maintain Prestige.

New York, Jan. 3 (AP).—Counsel for Mrs. Gloria Morgan Vanderbilt, handsome young widow, pleaded with a surrogate today for an adequate allowance to maintain "the prestige and tradition of the Vanderbilt name" and the court indicated a substantial sum would be granted.

The argument was on a motion to determine whether the court should continue the $48,000 annual allowance from the estate of Mrs. Vanderbilt's heiress daughter, Gloria, whose custody has been awarded by the Supreme Court to a paternal aunt, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney.

Seeks $12,000 Yearly.

Nathan Burkan, Mrs. Vanderbilt's counsel, sought continuance of a $12,000 yearly allowance for her personal expenditures, including a $3,000 annual payment to her mother, Mrs. Laura Kilpatrick Morgan, who turned against her daughter in the custody proceedings.

Referring to his client as "this lady who has no income," Burkan added:

"Shall we change her manner and mode of living? The court must be practical. The situation has not changed. She had no money in 1933 and she had none in 1934.

"What is to be done with this child? A household retinue must be provided for her. She must be guarded by detectives. The mother must keep up her appearance. She must live up to the prestige and tradition of the Vanderbilt name."

Assails Whitney Offer.

Burkan also assailed Mrs. Whitney's offer to pay virtually all expenses of Gloria's maintenance in the five days a week when she is in the aunt's custody, saying the girl should not be the object of Mrs. Whitney's "bounty" when she has a fortune of her own.

"Mrs. Whitney is worth $150,000,000," he said. "Mrs. Vanderbilt isn't worth a nickel, but we resent her offer."

Surrogate James A. Foley, ordering Mrs. Vanderbilt to submit a budget of expenses for Gloria's week-end visits, indicated he would rule in favor of a substantial allowance.

"I am entirely in sympathy with your client" (Mrs. Vanderbilt), "I think she ought to continue to receive the $12,000 a year."

Earlier in the hearing, Surrogate Foley permitted withdrawal of Mrs. Vanderbilt's motion to be named a coguardian of Gloria's estate.

None of the principals appeared in court.

Bonus Bill Among 2,400 Introduced

he added, "and I think we could get enough votes to do the same thing in the Senate."

The bill would provide for payment of approximately $2,200,000,000 to World War veterans on the basis of length of service.

Chairman Connery (Democrat), Massachusetts, of the House Labor committee, advanced the new 30-hour week measure. He explained it would prevent employers from reducing wages to offset shorter hours. The President or his agent would be permitted to grant exemptions for 90-day periods, no exemption to be for more than a 40-hour week.

30-Hour Work Measure Up.

President Roosevelt, under the bill, would be authorized to impose an embargo, tax or quota system on imports from any foreign country which failed to limit the hours of workers to 30 or less a week. All violators would be subject to a fine of $500.

A compromise bonus measure was presented by Representative Sears (Democrat), Florida, with provision for giving veterans Treasury certificates that could be used as legal tender and retired at a rate of $200,000,000 annually. Immediate cash payment of the bonus would involve an outlay of $2,100,000,000.

Social legislation was high up in the long list of new bills today. Unemployment and social insurance would be provided by a bill drafted by Representative Celler (Democrat), New York. Old-age pensions were proposed by Representative Buckbee (Republican), Illinois.

Home Loan Bill Offered.

Other bills would:

Add from $1,000,000,000 to $3,000,000,000 to the amount of Home Owners loan bonds (about 30 such bills introduced).

Pay off depositors in closed banks, reintroduced by McLeod (Republican), Michigan.

Provide a sales tax bill, by Treadway (Republican), Massachusetts.

Permit lotteries for raising money to help meet the cost of Government, by Kenney (Democrat), New Jersey.

Prevent profiteering in war, by McSwain (Democrat), South Carolina, chairman of the House Military Committee.

Establish a bimetallic currency system and provide free coinage of silver, by Pierce (Democrat), Oregon.

Establish the silver dollar as the unit of value, make all currencies redeemable in that dollar and direct the Treasury to acquire enough silver to permit redemption.

Representative Dickstein, of New York, introduced one bill calling for a permanent committee on "American Democracy" to guard against spread of subversive propaganda, and another to make payment of $15,000 to wives of employes of Government agencies killed in performance of hazardous duty.

Topeka, Kans., Jan. 3 (AP).—Mrs. Homer Hoch, wife of the chairman of the State corporation commission, died at a hospital here today. She had been ill of pneumonia since December 22. Mr. Hoch is a former Representative in Congress.

Court Decides They'll Stay Together

Ann Harding and her daughter, June.

Court Awards Ann Harding Exclusive Custody of Jane, 6

Previous Agreement Had Given Daughter to Father 2 Months Out of Year; 'Natural Justice,' Says Actress at Reno.

Reno, Nev., Jan. 3 (AP).—In the privacy of District Judge Thomas F. Moran's chambers, blonde Ann Harding, of the films, today won the legal right to have exclusive care, control and custody of her 6-year-old daughter, Jane.

Her former husband, Harry Bannister, did not contest the motion and the hearing, from which spectators were barred, required less than an hour and a half.

"Naturally I am pleased at the court's decision," Miss Harding said, "it was simply natural justice."

Judge Moran's ruling modified Miss Harding's 1932 divorce decree, which gave custody of Jane to Bannister, writer and actor, for two months out of each year.

The only testimony taken today was given by the actress and a governess for the child. Jane remained in the courthouse law library with a khaki-clad bodyguard and another governess.

Refusing to disclose details of the proceedings, Miss Harding's attorney, William Woodburn, said her motion had been based on "the contention that it would be for the child's best interests to remain with her mother."

Judge Moran granted Miss Harding's divorce from Bannister at a private trial May 7, 1932, after both declared that the "single reason" for their separation was that Bannister's career as an actor was being "overshadowed" by Miss Harding's rise to stardom. Her formal charge was "extreme cruelty."

eral workers would choose their own representative to serve on a board to hear all complaints, including wages and hours. The second mediator would be the head of the agency concerned and the third would be named by the Civil Service Commission. There would be a "court of appeals" for all complaints except dismissals resulting from failure to abide by rules of discipline.

Other important clauses of the bill would:

Increase the annual pension of professional men and women in the civil service from a maximum of $1,200 to $3,000, the money to be paid in large part by the worker.

Provide for reclassification of all Federal workers to prevent one person from receiving $6,700 a year for doing the same work as another person receiving $1,200.

Proposes Retirement at 55.

Place all Postoffice Department appointments under the civil service.

Give all Federal workers the option of retiring at 55 instead of 65 or 70 as at present, those in good health and competent to remain until 70.

Sirovich said he would perfect his measure after studying replies to 1,000,000 questionnaires sent to Federal workers by E. Claude Babock, American Federation of Government Employes president. He added all other organized workers favored the bill.

Meanwhile, it was reliably reported that Representative Robert Ramspeck (Democrat), Georgia, would be named chairman of the new House Civil Service Committee.

12-Billion Gain In Debt Reported

December 31, 1930, the date of the lowest post-war debt. The public debt during the World War increased $25,314,000,000.

Thus the existing economic depression already has increased the national debt virtually one-half of the sum the Government obligated itself to during the World War.

To what greater heights the Treasury debt will climb before it is possible to start reducing it can not be predicted. President Roosevelt's message to Congress today and the budget he will send to Capitol Hill on Monday will throw some light on that question.

Predicted $31,834,000,000.

In his last budget message, however, the President estimated that at the end of this fiscal year, next June 30, the public debt would reach $31,834,000,000. At that time he expressed the belief that the "Government should seek to hold the total debt within this amount."

"Furthermore," the President asserted, "the Government during the balance of this calendar year should plan to bring its 1936 expenditures, including recovery and relief, within the revenues expected in the fiscal year 1936."

Since that message went to Congress, there has been no decrease in the relief load carried by the Federal Government. Demands have been made in various quarters for huge appropriations for public works, such as housing, rural electrification and highway work, to absorb the still staggering load of unemployment.

Higher Figures Forecast.

Consequently, it is believed that when the present Congress completes its session legislation will have been adopted requiring expenditures that will bring the public debt to a much higher figure than the $31,834,000,000 set by the President a year ago as the high-water mark.

The Treasury report for the first six months of this fiscal year showed revenues totaling $1,845,082,517, compared with $1,468,897,941 in the corresponding period of the previous year. General expenditures for the last six months totaled $1,722,394,745 and emergency expenses $1,822,625,170, makin total expenses bursements of $3,545,017,914.

Thus expenditures exceeded receipts by $1,699,933,397, which represents the deficit for the period President Roosevelt a year ago estimated a deficit of $2,000,000,000 for this fiscal year.

First Lady Asks Continuance Of Son's Trial for Speeding

Orange, Conn., Jan. 3 (U.P.).—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt has written Prosecutor David Torrance a letter asking a continuance for her son, Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., who faces a speeding charge here, Torrance said tonight.

The prosecutor received the letter, written on White House stationery, today.

Torrance also received a telegram from Franklin D., jr., saying he would be unable to appear in court today and requesting a postponement of his case until Saturday.

Torrance at first interpreted Mrs. Roosevelt's letter as "a request for leniency," but later he said this was a misconstruction. She merely asked that the case be continued until 5 p. m. Saturday, so that her son could appear in court without missing his college classes.

Mrs. Roosevelt said it would be inconvenient for her son to come back in the middle of his vacation, Torrance continued, adding that he later received one telephone call from New York and one from Washington about the case.

Torrance said he would telegraph young Roosevelt notifying him to be present in court Saturday if possible—if not, on Monday.

Franklin, a Harvard student, has been arrested before in Connecticut for speeding and also faces a similar charge in Pennsylvania. He was arrested here late last month charged with speeding between 75 and 80 miles an hour along the Boston Post road, with his brother, John.

Torrance said he did not intend to be guided by sentiment, but would see "that the case was handled on its merits alone."

Laval Departs For Vital Talk With Mussolini

Carries Tentative Draft for Proposed French Pact With Italy.

Paris, Jan. 3 (AP).—Foreign Minister Pierre Laval left Paris tonight for his epoch-making visit to Premier Benito Mussolini of Italy.

"Realizing the grave difficulties of the present," he said, "we will defend together the interests of peace."

The foreign minister took with him tentative draft of the proposed Franco-Italian agreement to assure Austria's independence and guarantee the peace of central Europe, and proposals to settle the two nations' colonial questions in Africa.

After his return from Rome, Laval, possibly in company with Premier Pierre-Etienne Flandin, will visit London to discuss European matters, including Britain's recently proposed general security pact, with Sir John Simon, British foreign secretary.

Il Duce Sets Stage.

Rome, Jan. 3 (AP).—Benito Mussoloni set an elaborate stage tonight for his dramatic meeting with Laval.

To point the significance of Laval's visit, expected to bulwark peace in central Europe and smooth out long-standing Italo-French differences, Il Duce himself will go to the railroad station tomorrow morning, in company with the foreign office staff and thousands of soldiers.

Laval and his staff will reside either at the French Embassy or at one of the big central hotels. His first conversation with Mussolini will be held Saturday morning. Afterward they will lunch together in private.

Round of Public Events.

The round of public events includes visits to the Pantheon and the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier, an enormous dinner and reception at the Menezia Palace with over 1,000 noted guests, and another reception Sunday afternoon by the governor of Rome at the capitol building, the world's oldest palace.

The foreign minister will be received by Pope Pius Sunday morning. He also will call on King Victor Emmanuel before he leaves Tuesday at noon.

All the time the two leaders are conversing, experts whom Laval is bringing with him will be closeted with Mussolini's assistants ironing out details of the proposed Franco-Italian agreement. It probably will have two main phases:

1. A guarantee of Austria's independence and of the territorial integrity of Central European nations.

2. Certain concessions to Italy in Africa. A free hand in Ethiopia may be given Mussolini, it is said.

Alleged Slayer Seized in Flight From Oklahoma

Cassville, Mo., Jan. 3 (AP).—Bob Johnson, sought as a participant in a series of gun fights at Picher, Okla., in which a deputy sheriff and a former convict were killed, was captured by Missouri officers after a 30-mile motor chase today.

Wounded and fatigued, he was overhauled in a bullet-scarred car at the Ozarks hamlet of Abesville. He surrendered two revolvers and $80 in cash.

Sheriff Evan Shore, of Barry County, had marked the car with machine gun fire when the fugitive sped through Cassville. Two of Shore's deputies and the sheriff of adjoining Stone County, Seth Tuttle, made the capture.

His right thumb wounded, Johnson declined to discuss the shooting last night in the mining town of Picher.

Killed at Picher were Deputy Sheriff Gerald Hodge, 35, and Buster Cooper, 27, a former convict.

Officers said the fatal skirmishes began when Constable Pat Bray, seeking a stolen car, halted two machines, one driven by Cooper and the other by Johnson. Bray was felled by buckshot.

Norcross Drops From Court Fight

Cites Exigency in Ending Move for Appeals Post.

San Francisco, Jan. 3 (AP).—District Judge Frank H. Norcross, of Reno, Nev., center of a controversy when President Roosevelt proposed him for promotion to the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, today withdrew his name from further consideration for the post.

"The present exigency of the court (two vacancies) is a matter of too great public importance to be delayed," he said. "No matter how deeply my personal feeling is respecting the outcome of the appointment."

He announced he had wired Nevada's Senators, Key Pittman and Pat McCarran, not to press for confirmation of his appointment.

County Board Picks Garrett To Head Police

Aud Is Named Assessor as Fusionists Assume Montgomery Rule.

Montgomery County Fusionists yesterday began the distribution of patronage when a new chief of police and county assessor were appointed by the county commissioners meeting at Rockville, Md.

J. William Garrett, of near Gaithersburg, was appointed chief of police to replace Alvie A. Moxley, Democrat. Garrett was elected by a vote of 3 to 2. The two Democratic commissioners, Robert D. Hagner and Richard H. Lansdale, voted for Moxley. Garrett was nominated by Frank H. Karn, Republican president of the board.

William L. Aud, Progressive Democrat, was appointed county assessor to replace J. Hempstead Griffith, Democrat. Aud was active in the Fusion party in the election and four years ago was a prominent member of the antiorganization Democrats, who formed a coalition with the Republicans in an unsuccessful effort to win the election.

Provide $3,000 Salaries.

Both offices pay salaries of $3,000 a year and were apportioned under the agreement reached between the Progressive Democratic patronage committee and the Republican State central committee.

Simon O. Smith, colored, was appointed janitor of the courthouse at Rockville: Marion D. Finch, of Takoma Park, was appointed a clerk in the office of Commissioner Paul M. Coughlan, in charge of the Silver Spring area.

Miss Helen Howard was appointed clerk to the State's attorney and the commissioners voted to retain Theodore Vollten, head of the county identification bureau. State's Attorney James H. Pugh requested retention of Vollten because of his valuable training and specialized knowledge, which would require several years' training to replace.

Authorize Dog Licenses.

The commissioners authorized the clerks to the county commissioners at the Bethesda and Silver Spring county buildings to issue dog licenses and granted permission to Gordon Burrows to erect an addition to his garage at Wisconsin avenue and Leland street, Bethesda.

Mrs. Mary G. Peter notified the commissioners that she would exercise her option and purchase the old jail site at a price understood to be about $2,500. The commissioners recommended to John C. Walker, general manager of the county liquor dispensaries, that the staff at the Clarksburg dispensary be reduced to one.

The commissioners had intended appointing a warden to the county jail, but it was discovered that under the law the sheriff appoints the employes of the jail and the selection must await his recommendation.

The new chief of police, Garrett, brings considerable training to his position. He served for 11 years with the Internal Revenue Bureau, and on numerous occasions was detailed to act in Department of Justice investigations. He owns two farms near Gaithersburg. His appointment was considered a happy one by both Democrats and Republicans. He is 62, married, and has two children.

The appointments take effect January 10, except for Miss Howard's, who was appointed as of January 2 when the new State's attorney took office.

Aud, a farmer, is 69. He was formerly chief of the county police and before that served as sheriff. He will succeed J. Hempstone Griffith, who has been tax assessor for the county for nearly 12 years.

Hitler Blasts 'Stupid Lies' Against Nazis

Leader Calls Meeting to Combat Reports Rife in Saar.

Berlin, Jan. 3 (AP).—Nazi notables, hastily and mysteriously assembled here, heard Hitler tonight scathingly assail "stupid and impertinent lies" spread abroad concerning the Nazi regime.

Hitler said the predictions of a Nazi collapse and consquent catastrophe after the Saar plebiscite January 13 would "fail to turn our Saar brethren from their determination to return to the Reich fold."

"These lies are disseminated after the well-known recipe," he said, declaring "the world shall know that the whole Reich is solid in defense of its honor, of its vital interests and of peace."

Anti-Nazi newspapers in the Saar recently published reports that another "blood purge" had taken place in Germany, with 100 or more dead and thousands imprisoned, but Nazi officials denied the charges, asserting it mere propaganda aimed at taking voters from the Nazi ranks.

In another address Hermann Wilhelm Goering, premier of Prussia and minister of air, declared:

"We are ready to follow Der Fuehrer in life and death. Your confidence fills us with pride. Foreign incitements are disseminated for the purpose of sowing uneasiness and distrust in the Reich before the plebiscite."

Elsa Sittell Free After Promise To Keep Silent

American Ends Eleven Day Term; May Visit Her Parents in Germany.

Waldmohr, Germany, January 3 (AP).—Elsa Sittell, New York girl, was free tonight after 11 days in jail for "insulting" Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler—free, that is, to do anything but talk.

Nazis in letting her out of the prison cell here, in which they put her the day before Christmas because she allegedly said Hitler had Jewish blood, clamped on the condition that she keep her story to herself and let the whole thing blow over. She carefully complied.

Waiting until after dusk to escape the handful of photographers keeping vigil before the red stone building, Miss Sittell rushed out of the prison, her face hidden in her black seal coat, jumped into a waiting taxi and hurried away to get the 14 pieces of luggage that started her troubles. The baggage is held at Schoenberg by customs officials.

She told officials she might continue the journey she started before Christmas to see her aged parents in Germany. Since she promised not to talk, she was informed she could remain in Germany.

Three lawyers from Paris and the consular authorities of her adopted Uncle Sam obtained her release.

Miss Sittell had gone to Europe intending to vote in the Saar plebiscite.

Going to Germany to visit her parents, she ran into difficulties with customs officials. While she was waiting for matters to be straightened out, she conversed with storm troopers and, it was charged, made derogatory remarks concerning the storm troops and Hitler.

It was understood she owed her freedom and permission to remain in Germany to the efforts of American consular authorities who were reported to have guaranteed the ministry of justice in Berlin that neither they nor Miss Sittell would make much ado about the case.

WASH OUT 15 MILES OF KIDNEY TUBES

Win Back Pep . . . Vigor . . . Vitality

Medical authorities agree that your kidneys contain 15 MILES of tiny tubes or filters which help to purify the blood and keep you healthy.

If you have trouble with too frequent bladder passages with scanty amount causing burning and discomfort, the 15 MILES of kidney tubes need washing out. This danger signal may be the beginning of nagging backache, leg pains, loss of pep and vitality, getting up nights, lumbago, swollen feet and ankles, rheumatic pains and dizziness.

Four Seamen Still Missing After Collision.

New York, Jan. 3 (AP).—A misunderstanding in signals sent the steamer Lexington to the bottom of the East River last night, testimony at a Federal inquiry showed today.

Less than 20 hours after the tramp freighter Jane Christenson cleft the Long Island Sound steamer in twain, the steamboat inspection service opened its inquiry into the collision with Capt. George Fried, hero of many a disaster at sea, in charge.

While officers of the Lexington, including Capt. William O. Pendleton reiterated their belief all aboard were saved, four members of the crew were still unaccounted for.

Tax Officials' Pay in Virginia Slashed Again

Treasurers and Revenue Commissioners Will Get $27,000 Less.

Richmond, Va., Jan. 3 (AP).—Treasurers and commissioners of the revenue of Virginia cities will be reduced more than $27,000 in basic salary and expense allowances in 1935 compared to 1933, the State compensation board announced today.

Senator Glass Will Observe 77th Birth Anniversary Today

Fiery Virginian to Mark Day by Working as Usual After Hearing Roosevelt's Address; Believed Oldest Senator.

Senator Carter Glass (Democrat), of Virginia, today will celebrate his seventy-seventh birthday by working as usual. Oblivious of the years as they pass on, the Virginian, usually described as "fiery," plans to attend the session of the Senate and to hear President Roosevelt's message to Congress.

As far as can be learned, Senator Glass is now the oldest member of the Senate. That, however, can not be said with certainty because there are several Senators, including the dapper J. Hamilton Lewis, of Illinois, who keep their age a secret.

Just behind Senator Glass in point of years, however, is Senator Duncan U. Fletcher (Democrat), of Florida, who will reach the age of 76 Sunday. Senator Fletcher is chairman of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee and, on that group Senator Glass sits beside him.

Despite his 77 years, Senator Glass apparently has lost none of the fire and spirit of his earlier days. This was illustrated a few days ago when he made an acrid attack on actions of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in lowering deposit interest rates and on "supremely wise men," "impatient academicians" and "sub-professors" in the New Deal.

With his health apparently much improved since the recess of Congress last June, Senator Glass is back on Capitol Hill pursuing his favorite hobby—the study of banking practices and legislation. He remains a conservative in banking matters—"an unreconstructed rebel," he calls himself—and he is certain to be heard in debate as soon as the congressional session starts rolling along.

Senator Glass, in addition to his deep interest in future banking legislation and in the future of the Federal Reserve system, which he fathered many years ago, is chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee. The latter task is one of the hardest on Capitol Hill, since that committee passes on a dozen or so appropriation bills making available the billions of dollars required by the New Deal.

Mother Describes Child's Last Night

Says Son Was Healthy and Happy When She Put Him in Crib; Identifies Clothing He Wore on Night He Was Stolen From Nursery.

a picture of the child?—A. It is.

Mr. Wilentz: I offer it in evidence.

Mr. Large: It ought to be marked.

Mr. Wilentz: I offered it in evidence.

Describes Nursery.

The Court: No objection; it will be marked.

(The photograph was received in evidence as State exhibit S-6.)

Q. Will you please, to the best of your ability and recollection, describe the nursery room for us?—A. Do you mean the placing of the windows, or——

Q. Yes, ma'am, and generally about the room as best you can, and the condition in which it was the night of March 1, 1932.—A. As you enter the nursery from the hall you face a large French window. Just below the French window was a window box with two doors below it which opened out, for toys. As you entered the nursery from the hall there were two windows to your left, sash windows. Between them was a fireplace and a mantel. To the left of the door as you entered was a small chiffonier. To the right of the door was a table. On the wall facing the two windows there was a door into a closet. That is to your right. The crib faced the fireplace, running along the length of the wall. Between the crib and the French window was a screen covered with paper of a colored design.

Q. Now, I think you stated that you were in the room at 6:15?—A. Approximately.

Saw Baby at Dinner.

Q. Approximately 6:15. And when did you see the child again? At that time he had already had his dinner?—A. He was finishing his dinner.

Q. Finishing his dinner. Where did he have his dinner, by the way; in the nursery?—A. In the nursery at the maple table, which is in the center of the room.

Q. Your room is connected with the baby's room?—A. Through a bathroom.

Q. Through a bathroom. Who had dinner with the baby that evening? Who was with him while he was eating dinner?—A. Miss Gow was with him and I came in at the end of the meal.

Q. I see. Then did you leave the nursery and where did you go?—A. I stayed in the nursery until the baby was in his bed. He had been dressed, he had been given medicine, he had been rubbed with some kind of grease for his cold and he had been put in his bed.

Q. About what time was that?—A. It was about 7:30.

Q. Had he had a cold?—A. He had had a cold for three days.

Q. Was he then suffering with a cold?—A. He was much better.

Q. Did he still have a little cough or had it disappeared?—A. He was a good deal better, breathig easily.

Q. So that you were not particularly alarmed about his cold?—A. No.

Tells of Dressing Baby.

Q. Notwithstanding that, however, as I understand it, you applied these medical aids. Will you tell us then if you were there when the child was put to bed?—A. He was in his bed when I left.

Q. Who dressed him for bed?—A. Miss Gow and I.

Q. Will you tell us then about that, please?—A. What he wore?

Q. Yes, ma'am. A. He had next to his skin a home-made flannel shirt which Miss Gow cut out and sewed that night out of a flannel petticoat for an infant which I had had since the child was an infant.

Q. Mrs. Lindbergh, I want to exhibit to you a piece of clothing that I have and ask you whether or not you can tell what that is?—A. That is the flannel shirt cut out of the flannel petticoat.

Q. Is that the flannel shirt that your child, Charles A. Lindbergh, jr., had on that night in that crib when he was put to bed on March 1, 1932?—A. It is.

Mr. Wilentz: I offer it in evidence.

Mr. Reilly: No objection.

The Court: It will be admitted.

(The garment was received in evidence as State Exhibit S-13.)

Q. Is Exhibit S-13 just introduced in evidence the shirt which you have just described? A. It is.

Identifies Nightdress.

Q. Now, will you tell us what else the child had as its bed clothes that night?—A. On top of the home-made shirt he had a small sleeveless wool shirt, cut very low in front and back.

Q. Will you tell us, please, whether or not you can tell from looking at this piece of clothing what it is?—A. It is the sleeveless shirt.

Q. Is this the sleeveless shirt that you just described as having been worn by your child that night, March 1, 1932?—A. It is.

Mr. Wilentz: I offer it in evidence.

(Sleeveless shirt received in evidence and marked State exhibit No. 14.)

The Court: If there is no objection, it will be admitted.

Q. What else did the child wear that evening as bed clothes?—A. He had diapers, fastened to the small shirt, to the second shirt, and on top of that he had a sleeping suit, a wool sleeping suit.

Q. Did you buy that sleeping suit yourself?—A. I did.

Q. I show you what purports to be a sleeping suit, and ask you whether or not you recognize that sleeping suit.—A. I do.

Q. What sleeping suit is that, Mrs. Lindbergh?—A. It is the sleeping suit that was put on my child the night of March 1.

Q. 1932?—A. 1932.

Q. And it is the sleeping suit then that your son wore that night as he went to bed?—A. It is.

Mr. Wilentz: I offer it in evidence.

The Court: If there is no objection it will be admitted.

(Sleeping suit received in evidence and marked State Exhibit No. 15.)

Wore Thumb Protector.

Q. Now you have told us about the sleeping suit and if I may be defensively leading for a minute, did the child have any thumb protectors on?—A. Pardon?

Q. Did the child have a thumb protector?—A. Yes, he had.

Q. Mrs. Lindbergh, will you tell us whether or not you recognize that as being one of the thumb guards the child had on, one of the thumb guards that was used for your child?—A. Yes.

Q. And is it one of the thumb guards owned by you and which you used for your child on occasions to fix the sleeping garment? A. It is, yes.

Mr. Wilentz: I offer it in evidence. (Showing to counsel for defense.)

There is no objection.

(The thumb guard was received in evidence and marked State's Exhibit S-16.)

Q. Now, on the night of March 1, 1932, after you saw your child dressed for sleeping, with these articles, did you then leave the bedroom, the nursery? A. I left the bedroom and went down into the living room.

Q. About what time was that, if you recall?—A. About 7:30.

Q. Was Col. Lindbergh home yet?—A. He was not home.

Tells of Call From Husband.

Q. Had you heard from him that afternoon or evening?—A. I had heard that he was coming, that he would be late.

Q. That he would be late, he had called you, had he?—A. He called me that evening.

Q. All right; now, at 7:30, when you came down, that was when you left the child's nursery, what did you do then, Mrs. Lindbergh?—A. I sat at the desk in the living room, which is opposite to the door from the hall.

Q. And then what did you do, Mrs. Lindbergh?—A. At 8:25 I heard the horn of my husband's car; he drove into the back court and into the garage. He then came in through the back hall, the kitchen, and the dining room, into the living room. We then went upstairs for about five minutes; we went down again into the dining room and had supper. I think we finished supper at approximately 9 o'clock, perhaps a little after 9. We went into the living room, sat down by the fire for a very short period—perhaps five minutes. We then went upstairs into my bedroom and we sat for about 15 or 20 minutes, talking. After that my husband drew a bath, took a bath, and went down again, downstairs into the library, and I got ready to go to bed.

Q. Were you also suffering with a cold that day and that evening?—A. I had caught the cold from the baby. After my husband left I rang the bell for Mrs. Wheatley and when she came, asked her for a hot lemonade to take before going to bed. I then drew a bath for myself.

Started Search for Baby.

Q. Did Mrs. Wheatley bring the lemonade?—A. She did not bring it, she went down to fix it, and after I had taken my bath, Miss Betty Gow came in to me through the hall door and asked me if I had the baby, and hearing that I did not, asked me if my husband had the baby, and I sent her downstairs. I then went into the baby's room through the connecting passage. This was after 10 o'clock, shortly after 10 o'clock. I went into the baby's room through the connecting passage, looked hastily at the bed, found it to be empty, came back into my room, where I met my husband and Miss Betty Gow. My husband went into the closet to take out a rifle, and we all went into the baby's bedroom and searched it. I was still in the baby's bedroom when Mrs. Wheatley came upstairs, and I went with her back into my bedroom and got dressed and we started to search the house.

Q. By that time I suppose Col. Lindbergh had notified the police?—A. He had spoken to Mr. Wheatley and he had gone outside with Mr. Wheatley to look around the house. I don't know what he did downstairs.

Appeal for Baby's Return.

Q. When you left that room at about 7:30 o'clock, did you observe whether or not the east window, that is, the casement window I think it is referred to, was closed?—A. All the windows were closed when I left that room at 7:30.

Q. At 7:30. And there were shutters on the outside of the windows, were there not?—A. Yes.

Q. Were they drawn and closed?—A. Miss Betty Gow and I closed all the shutters on all the windows before I left.

Q. With particular reference to the east window, was it possible to lock it?—A. We both pulled on it and tried to lock it.

Q. But the window and shutters of the room, in that nursery were closed, as I understand it?—A. Closed when I left.

Q. You haven't seen that child since the first of March, 1923, have you?—A. No.

Q. And when it was revealed that the child was missing, did you join with Col. Lindbergh in an appeal to the person who had the child for its return? Did you join——A. What do you mean by that?

Q. Did you make a statement asking the person who had your child to return it?—A. I joined with my husband——

Q. Col. Lindbergh, yes. Did you on another occasion soon after the child was found missing make a radio appeal and statement giving the baby's diet?—A. I gave out the baby's diet.

Q. Do you recall whether or not you gave it out in the form of a statement or whether you personally spoke over the radio?—A. I did not speak over the radio.

Q. You did not. And you gave that diet out in order, I take it, that the child might be better cared for?—A. Yes.

Q. How about the windows in the room? Do you recall their condition after the baby was missed? A. I did not look at the windows.

Q. You did not? Do you recall seeing any paper note there? A. No.

Mr. Wilentz: May we have just one minute, if your honor pleases?

The court: Certainly.

Mr. Wilentz: Take the witness.

Mr. Reilly: Are you through, Mr. Wilentz?

Mr. Wilentz: Yes, sir.

Mr. Reilly: The defense feels that the grief of Mrs. Lindbergh requires no cross examination.

The court: Nothing further, Mr. Attorney General?

Mr. Wilentz: That is all, thank you, Mrs. Lindbergh.

Col. Lindbergh Reveals Events OfFatefulNight

Finding of Empty Crib and Subsequent Confusion Is Described.

Miss Gow spoke to you about the child, did she not?—A. About 10 o'clock.

Q. Where were you then?—A. I was reading in the library.

Q. What happened, tell us, then?—A. Miss Gow called to me in a rather excited voice and asked me if I had the baby.

Q. What happened from then on?—A. I immediately went upstairs into the nursery and from the appearance of the room and of the crib I realized that something had gone wrong.

Q. What was the appearance of the room that indicated to you that something had gone wrong, colonel?—A. As I entered the room, of course, I immediately looked at the crib. The bed clothing in the crib was in such condition that I felt it was impossible for the baby to have gotten out himself. I knew that neither my wife nor Miss Gow had taken him because Miss Gow had asked me if I had him and my wife was upstairs. The clothing was standing—the bed clothing was standing stiffly enough so that the opening where the baby had b was still there, the clothing had not collapsed.

Q. Was the clothing in that crib still affixed to the mattress by pins, if you know?—A. As I recall, it was.

Q. I see. Did you see a note in the room, a paper, or what?—A. Yes, I am not at the moment certain whether I saw that note at that time or the next time I entered the room.

Q. I see.—A. But, either the first or second time; I came back very shortly.

Q. How much time intervened, would you say, between your first visit into the room and the second that you refer to?—A. I should say not over five minutes.

Found Note on Window Sill.

Q. At any rate, on one of those occasions you found the note there?—A. I had found a note unopened on the window sill on the southeast corner of the room on the window facing east.

Q. Did you find it, or was your attention directed to it by anyone?—A. No; I found it.

Q. I see. And I understood you to say on the window sill?—A. On the window sill.

Q. Was the window open or closed?—A. The window was closed.

Q. I show you an envelope with the initials F. A. K. on the back of it, and a note with the same initials on the back of it, and ask you whether or not that note and that envelope were found by you in that room that night, and whether or not those are the papers you just referred to as being on that window sill.—A. These are the papers. The note was in the envelope. The initials F. A. K. were not on at that time.

Q. Who placed those initials on?—A. They were placed on, I believe, by Trooper Kelly; but this is the note and this is the envelope which contained the note on the window sill at that time.

Kidnap Note Is Read.

Mr. Wilentz: I offer them in evidence.

Mr. Reilly: No objection.

(Envelope received in evidence and marked State Exhibit S-17.)

(Note received in evidence and marked State Exhibit S-18.)

Mr. Wilentz: I desire to ask permission of the Court to read the note.

The Court: You may read it.

Mr. Wilentz: "Dear sir: Have——"

Mr. Pope: Have you got a copy of the note for us, or anything that we can follow?

Mr. Wilentz: If there is a copy I would like to have counsel give it to Mr. Pope. I did present a complete copy to former counsel for the defense and it was the only copy I had, but there must be some copy here and we will get it for you.

"Have 50,000$ (dollars) ready, 25,000$ in 20$ bills, 15,000$ in 10$ bills, and 10,000$ in 5$ bills. After 2-4 days we will inform you where to deliver the m-o-n-y. We warn you making an-y-d-i-n-g public or for notify the police. The child is in gut care. Instruction for the letters are singature. Then you find these two circles and as indicated theren somewhere within them, as you see them better than I can describe it, this red fire ball or blotch and a' these distances three holes. Singnature three holes."

Q. Now, Colonel, of course you found your baby was missing and you found that the bed clothes in the baby's room had been disturbed. Did you notify the police?

A. Shall I describe it?

Q. Yes, please.—A. I immediately went into the closet in our own room adjoining and got a Springfield rifle which I kept there and stood at the top of the stairs, called to Mr. Wheatley and asked him to call the sheriff at Hopewell. That was the nearest officer of the law that I knew of. As soon as I found that his telephone call went through, so that the wires were not cut, which I had expected, as soon as he received an answer from the sheriff so that I knew that he was coming, I went outside on the road north of the house.

Q. With the rifle?—A. With the rifle. It was extremely dark that night, I could see a very little distance, and I walked on that road probably for 100 yards. I then returned to the house. Before I went on the road—I jumped——

Q. All right.—A. I went ahead a little bit. After Mr. Wheatley had made contact with the sheriff at Hopewell or with the chief of police, I then went downstairs—before I went out onto that road—and called the New Jersey State police and Col. Breckinridge in New York. Then I took the rifle and went out onto the road.

Q. And who is Col. Breckinridge?—A. Col. Breckinridge is my friend and attorney in New York.

Police Then Arrived.

Q. Then what did you do? Had the police come?—A. Very shortly after that, Chief Wolfe arrived. Meanwhile, we had touched nothing in the house, in the nursery room. I left instructions not to touch anything there. I myself had not touched the note. And after Chief Wolfe arrived, we began looking around the house outside.

Q. You are talking of Chief Wolfe, of the Hopewell police?—A. Of the Hopewell police, yes. We went around to the side under the nursery window, that is, on the east side of the house, and as I recall now, it was Chief Wolfe who, with his flashlight, found, located the ladder lying quite a few feet in approximately a southeast direction from the nursery window.

Q. That was either Chief Wolfe or Williamson?—A. Yes. I remember clearly seeing the ladder, but I am not certain at the moment who was holding the light. We walked through there on the planks which had been laid over the mud on the east side of the house, and we found both footprints and the imprints of the end of the ladder approximately under the southeast window of the nursery, but offset slightly to the north. So that the ladder was actually resting slightly to the north of the window itself.

Q. And you found the imprints of that ladder there?—A. Yes.

Q. And you say footprints?—A. The footprints that I saw at the time were of a man.

Kidnap Note Examined.

Q. Who were the officers, if you remember, colonel, to whom you first exhibited the note?—A. I left instructions, after finding the note, that no one was to touch it, and the note was not touched until Trooper Kelly, of the New Jersey State police, arrived. He moved the note from the window sill to the mantel over the fireplace with a penknife.

Q. Yes, sir.—A. And the note itself was not opened until Trooper Kelly arrived with suitable equipment for examining it.

Q. For examining it, you mean, for fingerprints?—A. Yes.

Q. Now I want to show you a picture of what, I believe, purports to be the ground right underneath the window in the immediate vicinity of that window, with some impressions or holes in the ground, and ask you whether you recognize those holes as being the place where the ladder stood, or the indentation or the impressions made by the foot of the ladder that you just refferred to?—A. Yes, they are.

Q. Do they correctly depict the impressions that you saw there that night made by the foot of that ladder?—A. By the ladder, yes.

Q. Well, there was the note and ladder, impressions in the ground, the child gone, police officers coming—I suppose the press soon came, too?—A. Yes.

Q. And about how many, would you say, were represented there in Hopewell that night before daybreak?—A. I don't know, I imagine several hundred.

Describes Confusion.

Q. Several hundred. So that, I take it, between the press and the police—and there were police of many organizations, weren't there?—A. There were.

Q. I take it that there was considerable confusion and walking in and about the premises, right?—A. Well, there was, the greatest confusion was before all of the press arrived and while the press was there, there was a great deal of walking around outside of the house by the press, which was absolutely out of control as far as the vicinity was concerned.

Q. I suppose that included the taking of pictures and flashlights and things of that kind?—A. Yes, and walking around the house on the loose ground there.

Q. And during all that time you were doing what, colonel?—A. During the first period I was around the house trying to familiarize the officials with what had happened.

Q. Go ahead, Colonel.—A. Later in the evening and during the early hours of the morning I was out on different parts, different places in the vicinity of the house with the group of police officers, visiting other houses.

Q. Having received this first note, did you receive another?—A. By mail, yes.

Q. To you directly?—A. The next one was addressed to me at our home in East Amwell Township.

Q. Note No. 2?—A. Yes.

Identifies Second Note.

Q. Will you take a look at that envelope, please, Col. Lindbergh, and this note and see if that isn't the note which you received second.—A. This is the envelope which contained the second note and this is the second note contained in the envelope. There are some initials on there that have been put on since.

Mr. Wilentz: All right, I will describe them. I will offer them in evidence.

(The envelope was received in evidence and marked State Exhibit S-19.)

(The note was received in evidence and marked State Exhibit S-20.)

Mr. Wilentz: Exhibit S-19 then is an envelope addressed to Mr. Colonel Lindbergh, Hopewell, New Jersey, and Note No. 2—we will refer to this as Exhibit S-20——

The Court: That has been offered in evidence.

Mr. Wilentz: And marked.

The Court—No objection. It will be admitted.

Mr. Wilentz: Exhibit S-20 reads: "Dear Sir: We have warned you note to make anyding public or notify the police. Now you have to take the consequences. This means we will hold the baby until everything is quiet. We can note make any appoinment just now. We know very well what it means to us. It is really necessary to make a world affair out of this or to get your baby back as soon as possible. To settle this affair in a quiet way will better for both. Don't be afraid about the baby. The lady taking care of it day and night. He also will feed him according to the diet. Singture on all letters with an arrow pointing to the circles and the red dot and the holes. We are interested to send him back in gut ouer. Ransome was made up for 50,000$, but now we have to take another person to it and probable have to keep the baby for a longer time as we expected.

"So the amount will be 70,000$—20,000$ in 50$ bills, 25,000$ in 20$ bills, 15,000$ in 10$ bills, 10,000$ in 5$ bills. Don't mark any bills or take them from one serial number. We will inform you later were to deliver the m-o-n-y—but we will note do so until the police is out of this case and the papers are quiet. The kidnaping was prepared for weeks so we are prepared for everything."

Mr. Wilentz: May we then at this time adjourn until tomorrow morning?

Whereupon, the court adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a. m.

Lindbergh Wears Hidden Gun As Precaution Against Threats

Goes to Trial With Pistol Carried After Getting Notes 5 Years Ago.

Flemington, N. J., Jan. 3 (AP).—Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, attending the trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann for the murder of his infant son, today carried the revolver he has worn beneath hsi left armpit for five years as protection against threatened bodily harm.

Five years ago, it was learned authoritatively, the aviator began to receive threats and as a precaution obtained a license in New Jersey to carry a weapon.

Many of the letters received were from cranks, and his associates arranged to sift the communications, displaying to him only those which appeared to be of a serious nature.

Shortly after the kidnaping the number of letters increased, but in recent months none of a serious nature has been received.

The weapon is so inconspicuously carried in a small holster that it almost conforms to the line of his body. He appeared in court in a gray suit, without a vest, but despite the fact that his coat flared slightly in front, the revolver and its holster could not be seen.

Only a slight bulge just beneath his arm, when his coat was buttoned, gave indication of its presence. The holster straps were so cleverly arranged that they scarcely were evident beneath the shoulder of his coat.

Under the left arm of Col. Lindbergh can be seen the bulge (indicated by arrow) where he carries a gun which yesterday was point of discussion.

Anne and Anna Provide a Study InEnvironment

Wife of Flier Is Cultured; Mrs. Hauptmann Has Drab Background.

Flemington, N. J., Jan. 3 (U.P.).—Anne Lindbergh is a pronounced brunette. Anna Hauptmann is a pronounced blonde. This difference is merely incidental. It adds color to difference.

The wife of the flier who winged his way across the Atlantic Ocean is the product of education, culture and refinement. There is a definite thread of the aesthetic in her, as is evidenced by the gentle poetry she has written.

The wife of an accused criminal, who stole his way across the Atlantic Ocean, is the product of bare necessities and illiteracy. She is a woman with her feet in the soil.

Both Anne Lindbergh and Anna Hauptmann have proved themselves loyal and loving wives. There is a difference, too, in their loyalty.

Anne Lindbergh has loyalty and economic freedom. She has affection rooted in pride and in independence of choice for the bestowal of her love.

Anna Hauptmann has the loyalty that asks no credentials of honor. She demands no mutual confidence or consideration. Her creed is, "Right or wrong, my man."

Both Anne Lindbergh and Anna Hauptmann are loving mothers. Both have baby sons. The difference is that Anne Lindbergh has been robbed of a son.

Pleas to Shift GeorgiaCapitol Gain in Force

Atlanta, Jan. 3 (AP).—Agitation for removal of the capitol from Atlanta increased today as three more cities bid for the capitol site, while Gov. Talmadge commented:

"This ain't my move. It's vox populi."

Asked by Milledgeville citizens if he would consider moving the capitol there, the Governor said he replied that he was "for the best interests of the people as a whole, especially the working people."

The move for removal of the capitol arose after the Governor got into a controversy with local authorities over their efforts to abolish a farmers' curb market here. The Governor wants the market retained as "a friend of the farmer and the working people."

Rush Burton, Lavonia newspaper editor, told the Governor today he would like to see the capitol moved to his city. Bids also came from Milledgeville and Millen. A number of other cities already had asked for the capitol, including Macon, Marietta, Thomasville and Augusta. Several days ago the Governor said a number of legislators had told him that if the people of Atlanta regarded the market as a nuisance, they might also regard the capitol as a nuisance. The bids for the capitol began pouring in.

Both the Governor and Tom Linder, commissioner of agriculture, have said that more curb markets were needed for Atlanta as a stimulant to business, as a means of finding a market for farm produce, and to keep prices of fruits and vegetables within the reach of working people.

Hauptmann Fails To Show Emotion

State Declares Kidnap Ladder Broke and Baby Died in Fall; Demands Death Penalty; Father Returns to Stand Today in Dramatic Trial.

wherever men read newspapers or spread information by word of mouth—the story of how he heard a crash and a rattle against the outside wall of his Sourland Mountain home on March 1, 1932, and then found his 20-month-old son missing.

"I heard a sound," he said, "like the breaking of a crate—the slats of a crate."

"Was it the kind of a noise like the falling of a ladder?" asked Wilentz.

"Yes, if the ladder was outside."

From a lawyer's standpoint, Lindbergh was a perfect witness. He never answered anything he wasn't asked and most of the time his replies consisted of "yes" or "no." Only once did he volunteer any information, and then he offered to tell what he did when he raced upstairs from his library and found his son gone.

"Shall I describe everything?" he asked.

"Please do," Wilentz replied.

"As soon as I found that my call to the police had gone through I knew my wires had not been cut. I phoned the police and my friend, Col. Breckinridge. Then I took my rifle and went outside. After Chief of Police Wolfe arrived, we went outside and found the ladder some 20 feet from the house. We found prints of the ladder in the mud under the window."

To Return to Stand.

"Did you take Chief of Police Wolfe up to the nursery?"

"Yes, I did. I left instructions that no one was to touch the note until the State troopers arrived."

He was talking about the ransom note that was left in an envelope on the window sill—a note signed by curious, ringed symbols. It warned Lindbergh not to tell the police the baby had been abducted.

"And then afterward, did you receive a second ransom note?"

"Yes."

There court adjourned, and Lindbergh will go back to the witness stand again tomorrow to continue the story of the kidnaping, the search for the child, the hoaxes and the midnight meetings at a cemetery hedge. He probably will be cross-examined.

And so Mrs. Lindbergh heard the story of her tragedy three times today—from Wilentz in his opening statement, from her own lips, and from her husband. Sorrow has dwelt with her much in the last three years. Her father has died, her son has been murdered, her sister has died; Violet Sharpe, a servant in the home of her mother, committed suicide, and her own butler—Ollie Whately—is dead.

Opening Statement.

Small wonder, then, that she came into court at 10:30 a. m. today looking like a woman who is facing an ordeal, and listened while Wilentz made the opening statement for the prosecution.

It lasted almost an hour, and revealed one important fact—that the State will attempt to prove that the ladder broke while Hauptmann was carrying the baby down it, and that the child was dead before the alleged kidnaper got off the grounds of the Lindbergh estate.

They will prove, Wilentz said, that the kidnaper ripped a sleeping garment off the child and sent it back to Lindbergh through Dr. J. F. Condon, the "Jafsie" who handed $50,000 ransom across the hedge in St. Raymon's Cemetery in New York.

For this kidnaping and murder, the State will demand a verdict of murder in the first degree—which means the electric chair.

"If you don't think this man Hauptmann is guilty," shouted Wilentz, "then acquit him. But if you think he is guilty, we say to you that we give no quarter to kidnapers and murderers in New Jersey and we demand his life for the life he took."

When he came to describe how "Jafsie" handed over the ransom money, Wilentz whirled and faced Hauptmann.

"Inside that cemetery," he shouted, "was Hauptmann. When he saw that Condon was alone—that no police were there—he talked to Dr. Condon.

Asked to See Baby.

"'Will I burn if the child dies?' Hauptmann asked Condon. And Dr. Condon, instead of answering, asked to be allowed to see the baby."

On and on the story went, with Mrs. Lindbergh seated in a folding chair over on the left side of the courtroom, twisting the little finger of her left glove.

Wilentz told how the money was delivered and how Condon got, in return, a note directing him to go to Massachusetts, where the baby would be found.

"And Lindy," said Wilentz, "who can fly to the end of the earth and find a speck, couldn't find his child because it already was dead down here in New Jersey. But finally the body was found here in this county.

"And one day Hauptmann drove up to a gas station in the Bronx and handed a gold certificate to the attendant.

"It was against the law to have gold. So the attendant asked Hauptmann:

"'Hey, what about this?'"

"'Oh,' said Hauptmann, 'I've got a hundred of those.'

"They arrested him.

"Belonged to a Friend."

"'Where did you get that money?' they asked Hauptmann after his arrest.

"'And Hauptmann said it belonged to a friend.

"Even in the closet of the Hauptmann home, we found Dr. Condon's telephone number and address. Hauptmann said he liked to write down numbers. We found that Hauptmann got the lumber for that ladder in a Bronx lumber yard.

"'Why, he's got that ladder around his neck We'll prove that lumber came from his own home. It was money, money, money that Hauptmann wanted. He wanted money for his hunting trips, to buy radios, and to gamble and speculate.

"Why he used Lindbergh ransom money even to buy sweepstakes tickets."

Many of the clews in this case were brought into court today—the ransom note, encased in celluloid to preserve it; the shirt which Betty Gow, the nurse, made from a petticoat, and the sleeping garment that the kidnaper tore from the child as proof of his crime.

Wilentz brought Mrs. Lindbergh to the stand after half of the afternoon session had been spent identifying maps of Hunterdon County and the plans of the Lindbergh house.

7 More Seized During Liquor, Gambling Raid

5 Accused of Operating Betting Center; Still Captured in House.

For the second time within 24 hours, vice squad police, in a series of swift raids, directed an intensive attack on illicit liquor and gambling operations yesterday, seized a 100-gallon still, a quantity of "numbers" slips and arrested seven persons.

Descending on a lunchroom in the 1100 block of Fifth street northwest, the raiders confiscated an assortment of alleged "numbers" forms and arrested five men. Police described the place as a "betting center" and said a number of "patrons" were standing in line to play.

Five Men Arrested.

Those arrested and charged with setting up a gaming table and operating a lottery gave their names as William Jimroglou, 31, of the Fifth street address; Nicholas Jimroglou, 27, of the same address; Walter G. Bethea, 28, of the 1100 block of Fifth street northwest; John R. Forte, 27, of Forestville, Md., and Peter C. Coyle, 32, of the 1400 block of Fairmont street northwest.

The raiders next visited a house in the 2200 block of Eighth street northwest and arrested Edward Butler, colored, 27, who, it was charged, was preparing to leave with a quantity of untaxed liquor.

Still Is Confiscated.

In the house, police said, they found a 100-gallon still, 1,000 gallons of whisky mash and several half-gallon jugs of liquor. Butler was charged with manufacturing liquor without a license, possession of unlicensed liquor and violation of the liquor-tax act of 1934.

Several hours later John C. Macon, 49, living at the Transient Bureau, was brought to headquarters on a warrant charging him with setting up a gaming table. Police said he faces an indictment for reputed gambling violations in the 2500 block of L street northwest.

Charges against eight other persons, arrested in raids Wednesday, will be presented directly to the grand jury, police indicated yesterday.

On Broadway With Ed Sullivan

Behind the Scenes

NEWSPAPER MEN covering the big trial at Flemington, N. J., regret that Dr. Charles Norris and his "country club" associates will not be among the witnesses for the defense or prosecution . . . Dr. Norris, medical examiner of the City of New York, calls the city morgue the "country club," and his clubmates are Dr. Alexander O. Gettler, the toxicologist; Dr. Thomas Gonzales, deputy medical examiner, and four or five other doctors, who serve as the "traveling eyes" of this highly efficient organization.

These specialists in death always are great copy for newspaper men, and their laboratory evidence has pinned more than one culprit to the hot seat of the electric chair . . . That one sentence: "Dr. Gettler confirmed the findings" has become, on more than one occasion, a grim indictment.

This modern Sherlock Holmes works with retorts, crucibles, alembics, bottles of all shapes and sizes, and instruments delicately enough adjusted to weigh the ink that covers a fingertip . . . In the Ruth Snyder-Judd Gray case, these instruments reconstructed the actual crime as vividly as though Norris and Gettler and Gonzales had been hidden in the room when the sashweight lifted and fell with murderous force upon the befuddled victim.

The vacuum still, examining the brain of Albert Snyder, proved definitely that he had been dosed with grain alcohol, probably colored to resemble Scotch whisky, and containing bichloride of mercury . . . Next the vacuum still revealed that Snyder, failing to succumb to this poison because a heavy meal resisted it, had been chloroformed . . Dr. Gettler's assistant, Harry Schwartz, frequently to avoid protracted and wearisome tests, in the prohibition era, tasted bottles of liquor and was able to tell what was in them . . . Schwartz put the Ruth Snyder bottle to his lips when it came to the laboratory and spat it out hurriedly: "Bichloride of mercury," he yelled . . . From then on, he was more patient.

IT WAS the famous Elwell case, in June of 1920, that convinced the Police Department of New York that bearded Dr. Norris, then in office for two years . . . Could render important aid to the homicide squad.

Elwell, big-time gambler, bridge expert, attracting to himself gorgeous society women and discontented wives, was found shot through the head . . . At 244 West Seventieth street at 8 o'clock the morning of June 11, 1920.

Pressure was applied from many influential quarters to close the case hurriedly . . . Elwell's diaries and his card-index of society women supplied the explanation of this "pressure" . . . All of them were afraid that their names would be splashed over the front pages . . . District Attorney Swann's doctor labeled the case a suicide, and attaches of Police Commissioner Enright's office confirmed the findings . . . Dr. Norris, conducting his own examination, denied these reports vigorously . . . "Elwell was murdered," he insisted.

It was his first out-and-out break with the police department and Dr. Norris had to win . . . In the crisis, he received telling aid from Capt. Willemse, then of the homicide squad at headquarters . . . It was Willemse who gave a demonstration with a .45-caliber revolver, similar to the gun that had inflicted the fatal bullet, that persuaded the district attorney's office and the police to reverse themselves and join in Norris' cry of "murder."

This was the perfect mystery case of fiction, the Elwell murder, and has remained so to this day . . . Norris and high police officials knew the identity of the murderer.

Metropolitan newspaper men always regretted that Dr. Norris and his "country club" associates didn't have an opportunity to handle the Lindbergh case . . . Metropolitan police always regretted that Capt. Oliver, one of the finest detectives in the country, likewise was held back from the case, being transferred to desk duty in a Brooklyn precinct when the city administrations changed.

As it developed, the Government men did splendid work on the baffling mystery . . . The fact that they were handicapped at every turn by the red tape that became a red herring across the trail of the kidnaper or kidnapers emphasizes the excellence of the Government investigators . . . Their reconstruction of the figure, the coloring, the speech and general characteristics of the Lindbergh kidnap suspect long before they actually laid hands on him, will forever remain one of the epic passages of modern detective work . . . It was the kind of observation and exact deduction that Dr. Norris and Dr. Gettler would applaud.

What they could have done in the Lindbergh case, of course, is purely imaginary . . . Dr. Norris, himself possessed of a grand sense of humor and modesty, will probably exclaim when he reads this column: "Old man, I zink maybe it is better for the 'country club' that we were not called in . . . Maybe we should have been exposed badly" . . . But I think not.

State of Nebraska To Lack A Treasurer

Lincoln, Nebr., Jan. 3 (AP).—The sovereign State of Nebraska, barring unforeseen developments, will have no State treasurer tomorrow.

George E. Hall was duly reelected to the office, and he stood by during the inauguration of the rest of Nebraska's new State administration this afternoon. But he could not qualify until he provided a new $1,000,000 bond, and none of the surety companies wanted to write it at the prevailing rate of $2,500 annually.

The Treaty With Brazil.

The report that Brazil has been forced to suspend payments on foreign debt account because of a lack of exchange is somewhat surprising in view of the fact that debt agreements were concluded so recently with foreign creditors.

One of the framers of the Aranha debt settlement has remarked that such action would "seriously jeopardize" the successful negotiation of the commercial treaty now pending between Brazil and this country. As a matter of fact, there is no good reason why progress of commercial negotiations should be impeded, if the report proves to be true. On the contrary, the more desperate the financial plight of Brazil, the more essential it becomes for her to expand her exports in order to replenish her diminished exchange resources.

Indirectly, of course, Brazil's financial embarrassment will no doubt necessitate a tightening of exchange control, which will interfere with the free movement of goods. That, however, is an incidental result of defaults, which should spur efforts to find a constructive solution for the basic difficulty. The State Department has from the beginning made it clear that it considers commercial agreements an aid to debt payment, not a bargaining weapon to be used to exact payments.

No country can be forced to meet the service of its foreign debt by threats or by commercial bribes, if its balance of payments shows a deficit which prevents it from fulfilling its obligations. The remedy for that situation has to be sought by finding ways and means to build up foreign balances and thus rehabilitate the debtor country. Such methods alone restore ability to pay and lead to an expansion of future buying power upon which our exporters must depend to find markets for their products.

One More Salient.

The recent debate in the newspaper world as to the worth of simultaneous transmission of story and photograph over press telegraph wires was conclusively ended yesterday. Washington was then presented with an excellent reproduction of the scene in the East River near New York the night before, when a steamship was rammed by a freighter and sank within a few minutes.

That school of publishers which has maintained that no intelligent reader needs pictures to understand the news of the day must admit that the combined effect of the pictorial and editorial presentation was undeniably more graphic and altogether more successful than the orthodox telegraphic news story, followed belatedly the next day by the camera shots.

The fact that Washington readers received a photograph at least the equal of, if not superior to, the picture carried in local New York papers only adds to the conclusiveness of the test.

One more salient has been carried in journalism's never-ending battle against time, to the satisfaction, and perhaps the edification, of the reading public.

Goody-goodies.

Goody-goody boys, says a member of the faculty at Columbia University, turn out to be professors. In advancing the argument that the professors themselves are to blame for tolerating violations of their academic rights, he described his faculty colleagues generally as "former good boys, the kind that stayed at home, got good marks and tried to please the teacher."

There is certainly a measure of truth in this provocative thesis, but if the inference is that the real leaders are recruited from the ranks of the mediocre students, it's the bunk. The majority of college-trained men and women mentioned in Who's Who are of Phi Beta Kappa rank.

The professor's remark, however, raises an interesting point. To what extent should scholastic endeavor predominate the business of living between the ages of 12 and 20? Marks, assuredly, do not make the man, but what does?

An interesting estimate may be found in that section of the will of Cecil Rhodes in which he defined the type of man he desired to receive scholarships at Oxford. It is on the basis of these definitions that committees of former Rhodes scholars throughout the country will this week-end select the successful candidates for 1935. The first two of the following qualities are, in Rhodes' opinion, the most important:

1. Literary and scholastic ability and attainments.

2. Qualities of manhood, truth, courage, devotion to duty, sympathy, kindliness, unselfishness and fellowship.

3. Exhibition of moral force of character and of instincts to lead and to take an interest in his schoolmates.

4. Physical vigor, as shown in outdoor sports or other ways.

The New Congress.

The Seventy-fourth Congress has assembled in an atmosphere very different from that which prevailed at the special session of its predecessor in the spring of 1933, or at the regular session which opened a year ago. The period of critical emergency has passed, and the period of reconstruction is at hand. With this change has come a parallel alteration of the responsibility with which the legislators are entrusted by the Nation.

When the depression was at its worst, drastic reforms and experimental action were, up to a point, justifiable. Rapid maneuvers to meet an acute emergency were often essential, and searching deliberation was by the same token impossible. Nevertheless, this inclination to choose seductive short-cuts has raised some serious problems which the present Congress will have to confront. A policy of uncoordinated stabbing at specific evils must, soon or late, give way to what can legitimately be called a legislative recovery program.

In the first two points of an interesting and liberal statement of objectives, informally advanced by the Republican minority yesterday, this failure of Congress to coordinate its policies is given indirect consideration. The statement calls first for restoration of the balance of power between the legislative, executive and judicial branches of government. It then emphasizes the desirability of "government by laws" instead of by administrative decree.

Both the points are well taken, but they fail to emphasize that government by executive order is to some extent a result of legislative deficiencies. If the mandate given the Administration is clearly defined, and based upon definite guiding principles, the executive is far less likely to overstep its proper prerogative.

It is, moreover, a grave mistake to assume that isolated experiments of a far-reaching character can be ordered by Congress without seriously affecting the destiny of the Nation. Each major action taken helps to determine irrevocably the course to be followed by our future history. When mistakes are made, there can be no turning back to make a fresh start.

When the Administration itself does not possess a clear and comprehensive plan, particularly if the opposition party is too weak to be effective, it is more difficult for Congress to initiate constructive planning. But in just such measure as the executive program is uncoordinated, it becomes the more vital for the legislative arm to insist upon logic, order and clearly visualized goals.

This is not always easy for an assembly whose members are accustomed to regard themselves as having local rather than national responsibility. The fact that the task is difficult makes it more, not less, important.

A New "Discharge" Rule.

Revival of the House rule requiring a majority vote to discharge a committee from further consideration of a bill has been somewhat obscured by the flurry of excitement which attends the opening of Congress. It is nevertheless significant as an indication of the trend our political evolution is taking.

"Liberalization" of the House rules became an acute issue during that long period prior to 1931 when a Republican majority was in control. When the Democrats finally obtained a majority they were so thoroughly converted to the principle for which they had been clamoring that they instituted a rule permitting a minority of 145 Congressmen to force a vote on unscheduled bills.

The effect of this gesture was, of course, to embarrass the House leadership at frequent intervals, and on more than one occasion to disrupt the legislative program. Minority factions repeatedly took advantage of the rule to press forward half-baked measures believed to have popular support. It is not mere coincidence that the reputation of the House as a responsible legislative body sank to a deplorable level during this period.

No doubt the so-called "discharge" rule would have been eliminated last year if Democratic leaders had had the courage to reverse their previous policy. By their current action they have repudiated most of the prattle about liberalizing the rules which runs through the Congressional Records of a few years ago. It is now the turn of the Republicans to shed crocodile tears over the restoration of a rule which they used to their own advantage so recently.

Sharp restrictions of minority rights is not theoretically ideal. But in actual practice it becomes essential to prevent factions from upsetting a legislative program, to discourage the trading of votes for quack measures and to avoid a breakdown of representative government, as the experience of several European countries shows. If Speaker Byrns uses this rule to frustrate bloc movements, without shutting off debate on vital measures and without substituting White House dictation for congressional deliberation, there will be no cause for complaint. After all, the greatest distortion of the ideal legislative process comes from the special rules by which the last House was wont to abdicate its constitutional responsibility.

Fruits Of Patronage.

No one who is at all familiar with the atmosphere which is said to prevail in the Department of the Interior will be surprised that a serious personnel problem has arisen. Its employes have been working under considerable tension. Charges are made that individual mail is surreptitiously opened, that telephone wires are tapped, and that other forms of espionage are not unknown. Under these conditions unrest, inefficiency and complaints to the White House might be expected.

Secretary Ickes takes full responsibility for the acts of the two subordinates against whom special protests have been made. He admits that individuals in his department have been investigated under orders from his office. Moreover, he asserts that "not one personnel change is made in this department without my personal approval." Such centralization of power, in so big an organization, is certainly indicative of a pathetic lack of confidence in his subordinates on the part of the Secretary.

In ordinary circumstances Mr. Ickes might be roundly criticized for the apparent lack of morale in a department to which so much vital work has been entrusted. Actually, however, this criticism must be tempered by reference to the situation with which he has been confronted.

The PWA, of which Mr. Ickes is administrator, has been a special target for the spoilsmen. Emil Hurja, right bower of Mr. Farley, was installed in that agency soon after its organization for the purpose of securing jobs for the faithful. After a merry whirl, in which it appeared that the PWA might become a recruiting station for patronage appointees, Mr. Hurja was transferred to the pay roll of the Democratic national committee. It appears, however, that Mr. Ickes has not yet overcome the psychology which was developed in his department at the outset of his command.

Undoubtedly the difficulties which have come to light through complaints against Ebert K. Burlew and Louis R. Glavis are rooted in the displacement of the merit system. When competitive examinations are subordinated to political favoritism in the selection of employes, conscientious officials naturally become suspicious. They may feel it necessary to indorse espionage to protect the Government against fraud or exploitation.

Perhaps it is as well that this object lesson on the fruits of the patronage system should be coming to light coincident with the convening of Congress, where at least some of the ultimate responsibility can be centered.

Was There Kraut Stuffing?

Some aspects of civilization endure while republics rise and fall, while thrones are built and destroyed. Governments change, yet not the governed. Dictators easily alter the laws of the land. It is harder to dictate the tastes of the dictated.

Elsa Sittell, New Yorker, was locked in a German prison on a charge of sneering at the Reichsfuehrer. Came New Year's Day. The stern Nazi jailers took it as matter of course that they must serve her goose and apple sauce, fried potatoes and Berliner pancake—all the substance and trappings, the Teutonic equivalents of turkey and mince pie, which inviolable German tradition decrees for a festival dinner.

There is a lesson in this. It is a lesson against ambition. It is the salutary lesson of Abraham Lincoln's favorite poem, "Oh, why should the spirit of mortal be proud?"

In the eternal sunshine of their serfs' immemorial culinary customs, the Hitlers fade, the Stalins shrink, all Agamemnons contract into the shadowy area where time and space are merged.

Imperial turkey, dead and turned to dinner,

It seems to be easier for some to say "My country, right or wrong!" than "My country, right or left!"

No, it isn't yet cold enough for us. It hasn't frozen stiff those who ask, "Is it cold enough for you?"

An Experiment For India.

(From the Philadelphia Inquirer.)

When the late E. S. Montagu was Undersecretary of State for India he remarked rather unfortunately that it was time the country was roused from its "pathetic contentment." Thus the idea of a reform of the Government leading at the very least to Dominion status speedily became a matter of practical politics. The issue has finally taken shape in a plan to make India self-governing.

It represents a great and perhaps a dangerous experiment. The gist of Mr. Baldwin's argument was that India had been led to expect self-government and that it would be dangerous to disappoint her. This is probably true, now that things have gone so far. But there remain grounds for opposition. English residents in India are naturally anxious about handing over the control of the police to the Congress Party and its terrorists.

An important consideration is that the Congress Party has already repudiated the proposed agreement. It resents the limitations which prudence imposes. And certainly no scheme will work against its wishes. The native princes, most of whom originally favored federation, are coming more and more to doubt the advisibility. Unless they are prepared to carry out the plan it is almost certain to fail. At best the experiment must be what a former Lord Derby called "a leap in the dark."

Those Who Need Loans.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Government is trying hard to solve the problems that are retarding the return of prosperity, but is apparently reluctant to acknowledge the causes of the delay.

Houses are not being built because of the bolstering of wages, materials and the high price of money. Wages are not lowered because of the disposition of labor. Materials are high because of the NRA influence on such things, and money commands a high rate of interest with no takers. This is all well known, but the Government's reluctance to admit it is holding back everything.

The Government is not taking any risks, and all its activities play into the hands of the sound, safe and secure people to their added advantage. The people who really need loans or assistance do not get them because of the safety signals of the Government. And yet the Secretary of the Treasury is trying hard to make the bankers loosen up and take a bit of risk with their money in order to get things going. JOHN T. MASON.

"Unbounded Courage."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The people of the United States hail the arrival of a new year with a feeling of satisfaction and security greater than in many years past. That the Administration of Franklin D. Roosevelt has introduced order and stability in our national affairs is among the remarkable and outstanding achievements of his administration. Now that this miracle has come to pass, the average man is prone to accept it as a matter of course, not realizing the precarious situation which Republican misgovernment had brought about with accelerated and cumulative effect to the menacing climax under the Hoover regime. The undying distinction of Mr. Roosevelt is that he met this great national crisis with initiative and unbounded courage.

Of admirable political adroitness, perfect political poise, with unconcealed desire and determination to right, as far as lies in his power, the wrongs of government and the grave injustices that have grown around them, Mr. Roosevelt has won the heart and confidence of the people to a degree perhaps greater than any President in our history.

With the courage and confidence inspired by such leadership, the people of the United States face the new year with every assurance that there can be no return of any such conditions as have existed, but that, on the contrary, the beneficent and constructive work of the President and his able councilors has only just begun.

"Is It Not Reasonable?"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: For the information of the public in general, and of the depositors or creditors of the insolvent Chevy Chase Savings Bank of Washington, in particular, I desire to submit the following observations:

This bank is still in process of liquidation. In obtaining sufficient funds for the purpose of paying the first dividend of 60 per cent to the creditors of the above-mentioned bank, certain assets thereof were, it is said, sold to the Riggs National Bank of Washington, D. C., under a so-called Spokane sale, which gave to the purchasing bank the right of substitution until June 15, 1935.

The right of substitution permits the purchasing bank to return to the receiver of the Chevy Chase Savings Bank at any time before June 15, 1935, any assets (purchased under the said sale) that the Riggs Bank considers bad or doubtful and to receive, in lieu thereof, cash or other assets. This right more or less guarantees to the purchasing bank all of the assets that it purchased.

In view of the substitution provision in the contract of sale, it will be impossible for further dividends to be paid to the creditors of the Chevy Chase Bank until the substitution provision expires June 15, 1935.

Is it not reasonable that the creditors of the Chevy Chase Bank should be supplied with detailed information, up to date, as regards the status of their respective claims? Was the "good will" value of the Chevy Chase Bank's clientele taken into consideration when the Riggs Bank took over the assets and business of the former bank? In the event that the Chevy Chase Bank's officials loaned the depositors' money to certain individuals on notes unsecured by sufficient collateral, should not those officials be held personally responsible?

It Was An A.P. Dispatch.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the December 30 edition of The Post there appeared a first-page article entitled "Stalin Guns Slay 14 as Plotters." Among other things it stated that the "death of Nicolaieff and his associates brought to 117 the toll exacted by swift-striking Soviet justice."

I was puzzled at this statement, for I am under the impression that "justice" is a word excluded from the Soviet vocabulary. One may imagine flowers growing on an iceberg, rather than justice thriving in the Soviet courts.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have read with great interest H. L. Blair's account of the building of his "splendid van" in which he plans to see America first, and trust that he will tell us later of what he sees from his house on wheels. It should prove a very entertaining and instructive series of articles. Let's hear more of him.

Savings, Interest And Depression.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Whether it was Marriner S. Eccles, governor of the Federal Reserve Board, Senator Carter Glass or Leo T. Crowley, chairman of the Federal Insurance Deposit Corporation, is beside the question. But whoever started the now national issue reducing the interest rates on savings accounts from 3 to 2½ per cent, effective February 1, deserves the thanks of the business world. That the issue will become dominant in this session of Congress is a foregone conclusion and that the banking and currency system of the United States will be scrapped or overhauled is certain.

The recent onslaught of Senator Glass against the Federal Reserve Board and the insurance deposit corporation for reduction of the interest rates on saving deposit accounts, whether legal or illegal, has focused the attention of the country on one of the most important and far-reaching problems affecting the return of prosperity.

All recent financial reports, despite the business depression, show that saving accounts are daily increasing. In New York alone they reached nearly $250,000,000 last year. As a result of these savings there is now nearly $300,000,000 less cash in circulation than a year ago. Every dollar put into these accounts makes conditions so much worse, since the misguided banker is not lending the money to speculative business men.

Despite its large gold holdings there is an abnormal business depression in the United States, wholly uncalled for, which requires a major operation to cut out the cancer which caused the business world to become sick. Congress should pass a new banking and currency law prohibiting national banks and trust companies from opening saving deposit accounts. These accounts, since they are bought, are a real liability rather than an asset to the banks. Such accounts would then seek the Government postal saving banks which pay 2 per cent interest, or the savings and loan associations for investment, with production and wages, and when properly invested would yield a greater return in dividends than the banks now pay in interest on such deposits.

That the United States Congress, as a result of the Glass-Eccles incident, will enact banking laws along the lines of those operated in foreign countries, where bank failures are seldom heard of, is among the possibilities. The "Big Five" London banks, with their thousands of banks scattered throughout England, recently decided to accept depositors' money for safekeeping only. At the time, these banks were paying only one-half of 1 per cent for such deposits. W. J. DWYER.

Another Forgotten Man.

Post Office, Friday.

AT LAST the New Deal has been traced back, by a reader of our Column, to the land of Greece and the ninth century before Christ.

There are several consolations about this. One is that it probably can't go back much farther. Another is that the latest rediscovered New Dealer was a lawmaker whom all the world has always respected—even if, except for a vaguely general reputation, he had become a Forgotten Man. He was Lycurgus.

* * *

Hadn't you forgotten the nature of his statutes? We had.

* * *

Yet nobody should have. For he:
(1) Took his country off the Gold Standard;
(2) Formed a Brain Trust;
(3) Gave his people an increase of leisure—a more abundant life;
(4) Made short work of the merely predatory rich.

* * *

Of course, it is that indefatigable student, Mrs. Louise Kidder Sparrow, who has recalled it. One wonders how anybody who is such a good sculptress has time to read half so much. Nevertheless, there it is: She has been reconsulting Plutarch and Plato. She has even found a parallel between the latest American legislation and that of Roman Numa Pompilius. As for the early Greek doctor of laws—

Well, she advisedly quotes the greatest biographer of antiquity:

"Common legislators, deficient in power or knowledge, would do well to study Lycurgus."

And then she goes on to recount his innovations in a manner compelling us to cry:

"Certainly some contemporary legislators—though not, of course, 'deficient in power or knowledge'—have consulted him!"

* * *

She quotes again: "He commanded that all gold and silver coin should be called in, and that only a sort of money made of iron should be current, a great weight and quantity of which was of very little worth."

There, we assume, was the origin of a term once common in our own Golden West—"iron dollars." And there, anyhow, was a sure cure for many ills, since:

"Who would rob another of such a coin? Who would unjustly detain or take by force, or accept as a bribe, a thing which it was not easy to hide, nor a credit to have, nor indeed of any use to cut in pieces?"

Yet Sparta contigued to use this iron money for full five centuries.

* * *

Lycurgus knew how to handle a Senate, too. He turned it into a Brain Trust: "The Senate vacancies he ordered to be supplied out of the best and most deserving men . . . the wisest and the best"—even if he did differ from modern ideas by directing that these sages should each be "past sixty years of age."

* * *

Finding that "the state was overloaded with a multitude of indigent and necessitous persons, while its whole wealth had centered upon a very few," he redistributed the lands. And then—yes, sir—he "procured his people . . . abundance of leisure . . . Of the money-making that depends upon the troublesome going about and seeing people and doing business, they had no need at all in a state where wealth obtained no honor or respect."

What says, or should have said, if not "the Good Gray Poet," at least the poet Gray? Sweet are the uses of leisure and an iron dollar!

* * *

Lycurgus was, in short, so nearly perfect that it is a relief to find he had one human weakness. He thought so well of his work that he didn't believe it could ever be bettered:

"Wishing to make the greatness and beauty of his political structure immortal, as far as human forecast could reach, he administered an oath to the Kings, the Senate and the whole commons to abide by and maintain the established form of policy until he should return from consulting an oracle." (After all, he did believe in oracles.) And then he went away and simply never returned!

He went over to Crete, where he starved to death.

Nor was his demise caused by an endeavor to subsist there on the purchasing power of his own iron dollars. It was designedly brought about by a sort of topsy-turvy hunger-strike—among the first in history. He was bent on suicide "by total abstinence from food."

And why?

Because he wanted to hold to their vows the beneficiaries of his legislation!

His friends, "in accordance with his own request, scattered his ashes into the sea, for fear lest, if his relics should be transported" to the land of his labors, "the people might pretend to be released from their oaths, and make innovations in the government."

Adds Mrs. Sparrow: "The great innovator wished, when his innovations were effected, to make an end of innovations."

They didn't last forever?
Well, no—they didn't.
But what that is human does?

A Japanese Writer's Adventures In Russia

Solicitude Of OGPU For Well-Being Of Foreign Visitors And Diplomats Remarked In Trip.

By K. K. Kawakami.
(Special Correspondence of The Post.)

THE few weeks I spent in Russia last summer were the most interesting I had ever enjoyed abroad in my long journalistic career, affording me an opportunity to know not a few things about the U. S. S. R. which I had not known. Not such weighty matters as the five-year plan, the Stalin-Trotsky feud or the sovhoz (state farm) and kolhoz (collectivitized farm) in discussion of which tons of paper and ink have been consumed, but rather things which authors of books and magazine writers seem to consider too trivial to write about.

Trivial, yes, but they seemed to me to afford something of an insight into the ideology and idiosyncrasies of the Soviet regime. I did not join any of the parties conducted by Dr. Sherwood Eddy, Miss Anna Louise Strong, or Mr. Louis Fisher, nor did I enlist the service of the Intourist, the Soviet official travel bureau, for I thought I could understand Russia better if I traveled alone. This was not my first trip to Russia.

Let me begin my story at the beginning. When I went to the Soviet Embassy at Washington for a visa I was told that my application would have to be cabled to Moscow and that it would take two or three weeks to get a reply, favorable or unfavorable. Favorable or unfavorable! "But," said the secretary, "if you would stop at Berlin or any European city, I would endeavor to have your visa sent there direct from Moscow." He would endeavor, but he would make no promise. I decided to take a chance and requested that the visa be sent to Stockholm.

The next day, in New York, an American journalist who had been in Soviet Russia a number of times warned me that I might never get the visa. The Russians, he said, try to be polite, and just because they try to be polite, their word can not always be depended upon.

* * * *

UPON my arrival at Stockholm I immediately called upon Mme. Corontine, that celebrated feminine Soviet diplomat, minister to Sweden. Contrary to the mental picture I had drawn of her from my knowledge of the epithets heaped upon her by the American press when she was Red minister to Mexico, I found her far from an amazon, but charming and friendly. I asked her if she had received my visa from Moscow. "Not that I know of," she replied, apparently sympathizing with me. "But," she added, "I shall immediately cable Moscow and will see to it that you will get the visa without undue delay."

Three days later I found myself in Leningrad, where I spent a week before going to Moscow. In Moscow the first thing which interested me immensely was the Soviet system of censorship. I rather liked the frank and open way of it. Let me "talk shop" a while. I, like all foreign correspondents, was required to submit to the press bureau of the foreign office all such dispatches as I wanted to send to my papers in Japan. There were four press officers, each authorized to affix his signature to the copies examined. Without this signature no dispatch is accepted at the telegraph office.

Whenever I took my dispatch to the foreign office one or another of the censors read it in my presence, and pronounced his judgment, sometimes suggesting a deletion or a change. They were all of them very courteous and listened to my objections to their suggestions. The long dispatch, in which I urged better understanding between Russia and Japan and advocated nonarmament of the Siberian-Manchukuo border, received their particular scrutiny. The gentleman who read it retired into another room with it, evidently to confer with his colleagues. In some 15 minutes he emerged from the conference only to tell me that I had to allow him three more hours before he could give me a definite answer. I felt myself flattered that my humble dispatch should be taken so seriously. What he did in the three hours I could not ascertain, but in the end I got permission to send out the dispatch just as I wrote it.

* * * *

THE system is irksome. The press bureau is on the fifth floor of the foreign office building in which the elevator is often out of commission. To pass through the entrance to the building an itinerant correspondent, such as myself, must first obtain a written permit each time he wants to go up to the press bureau, though the resident correspondent is given a pass which he may use at any time.

Sometimes alert correspondents "beat" the censor by using the telephone to reach Warsaw, Berlin, Paris or London. Needless to say that such correspondents incur the displeasure of the foreign office, often resulting in retaliation which sometimes takes the form of expulsion. Thus does the Soviet government control foreign correspondents, whose dispatches it hopes to utilize to advance its policy abroad.

To anyone who has visited Russia with his eyes and ears open the recent assassination of Sergei Kiroff and all the terrorist massacre and arrests and expulsions which followed are a matter of no surprise. In Russia one feels unrest in the air. It seems as though I never saw a smiling face or laughter or an animated conversation in all the weeks I was there.

Stalin is so apprehensive of his own safety that he is known to change his abode constantly. He seldom sees anyone except a few trusted men. When he is persuaded to see a man outside his trusted group he never lets him know in advance where the interview is to take place but sends his own car to fetch him at the appointed hour.

In the old days I knew something of the famous or infamous Ochrana, the Czarist secret police. After the revolution I tasted something of the practices of the Cheka, the Bolshevist successor to the Ochrana, for I was arrested by its agents, for no plausible reason, in Siberia in 1922. After the Cheka came the OGPU. Thus the technique of repression and terrorism runs in much the same way through the white and the red regimes.

* * * *

HERE is an episode which throws an interesting sidelight upon OGPU operations. A foreign ambassador in Moscow, an insatiable angler, went fishing a few miles out of the city last summer. His car, as usual, was followed by OGPU men also in automobile. It was a hot day. When the ambassador arrived at his fishing ground and paid out his line, the officers, at a decorous distance, stripped themselves and went bathing, assuming that the exalted fisherman would stay where he was for some time.

But the ambassador had no bites, became impatient, pulled up the line, and ordered his chauffeur to drive him home. Up jumped the OGPU officers from the water, and scampered into their car, and half-naked drove furiously after the ambassadorial car! No fish story this! Had the ambassador reported the incident to the OGPU headquarters the two men would have been not merely dismissed but sent to some labor camp in the extreme north, not for chasing the envoy but for neglecting their duty by going into the water. Such is Soviet discipline.

In no country are foreign envoys so well "protected" as in Soviet Russia. The degree of protection varies in inverse ration to the degree of friendliness of the Soviet government toward the various envoys. An ambassador, whose home government is on good terms with the Soviet Union, is not so "well protected" as ambassadors whose home governments are at loggerheads with Moscow. And the protection is both open and secret.

In front of almost every embassy stands a policeman keeping eternal vigil, stopping and questioning such Russians as may enter its premises. That practically scares away all Russians. Whenever the ambassador's car is ready to take him out, the policeman signals his OGPU colleagues, usually two, who are ever on duty in their car a couple of blocks away. Another OGPU officer is known to occupy a room across the street from the embassy gate watching all who may pass through it.

Occasionally, if not regularly, the Russian employes of the embassies are secretly summoned to the OGPU office and are asked embarrassing questions. Those thus summoned are enjoined upon pain of severe reprisal not to divulge to anyone that they were summoned at all. The nature of the questions asked can easily be surmised—who called on the ambassador? Who lives with him? Whom did he entertain? What did they talk about? And so on.

Of course, no ambassador is so naive as not to sense what is going on about him. All observe the utmost decorum, acting upon the assumption that in Russia they could trust none but those whom they have brought with them from their respective home countries. They may console themselves if they know that the OGPU keeps tabs on Soviet ambassadors themselves. In Moscow one hears that the OGPU has its agents attached to Soviet embassies abroad.

The OGPU has recently been renamed the Commissariat of Home Affairs, but that is only a change in name conceived to allay foreign criticism.

7 Books on Civil War Presented Petersburg

Petersburg, Va., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Seven octavo volumes entitled, "Massachusetts Soldiers, Sailors and Marines in the Civil War," have been sent here as a gift to the Petersburg National Military Park from General John H. Agnew, adjutant general of Massachusetts, to be preserved at the National Military Park headquarters for use as a reference work. Another volume and an index, yet to be published, will be forwarded later.

The gift was received by J. V. Colston, park project superintendent, and contains the individual record of every man who served, prefaced by a short historical sketch of the service of the regiment as a whole. Massachusetts had 28 regiments and batteries engaged in the siege of Petersburg in the summer and fall of 1864.

Along The Potomac

With

Carlisle Bargeron

Democracy In The Aisle.

DEAR ALECK: I am so excited I can hardly pen these words. I have just witnessed the opening of Congress. You know, that great body which eats out of Mr. Roosevelt's hand except on the bonus. It is the most thrilling spectacle one can see, that is to say, this spectacle of so many people having jobs and the happiness on their faces because they have them. Those members who barely got through the campaign by the skin of their teeth, Aleck, were bubbling over with joy, and one could tell they have grimly resolved to attend every roll call in the future.

BARGERON.

I went up with the newspapermen, Aleck. I declare they get in on everything. And are they the wags? I'll say they are.

Mrs. Roosevelt was in the House gallery and when she had to leave the newspapermen said she had to leave to go to Alaska. She didn't have to do this at all, Aleck, but the newspapermen are such wags.

* * * *

I got my biggest thrill, though, Alex, when Puddler Jim Davis, the people's friend and whose life is an open book, and Gallant Joe Guffey, also the people's friend, appeared arm-in-arm in the aisle to march up to the dais to be sworn in. I shall never forget it as long as I live. Here together, arm-in-arm, were the people's two friends.

I was so surprised, though, Aleck, that they didn't look like the people's friends as portrayed by the labor organizations at all. They looked like the labor conception of the vested interests. Both had on tail coats and striped trousers and with embonpoints which denoted ample living, not the drawn stomachs which are the lot of the people and their friends. Isn't it funny, Aleck, when you are reared to believe certain things and grow up to learn they are not.

* * * *

The newspapermen roared when they saw Puddler Jim and Gallant Joe together. They seemed to think it was the richest joke yet. No State but Pennsylvania would do that, they said as they hilariously slapped one another on the shoulders.

Gallant Joe had on spats but Puddler Jim did not, and the newspapermen said that Puddler Jim had broken a gentleman's agreement that they both wear spats. Beyond being surprised that they looked so well-fed, I really couldn't see what the newspapermen were laughing at. They are probably employed by the vested interests and think the people's friends are funny.

* * * *

As a matter of fact, I understand the vested interests once tried to remove these two people's friends, that they tried to put them in jail. Doesn't that make your blood boil or your boil blood, whichever it is, Aleck?

I think it is a fine commentary on the supremacy of the people, after all, that the vested interests failed in this instance, and that here together, poised in the aisles of the Senate, instead of being where the vested interests wanted to put them, they were. It was so thrilling.

One has heard a lot recently about "Democracy at the Crossroads" but here, Aleck, was Democracy in the Aisle.

* * * *

They looked so unlike the other people's friend, Aleck. That is to say they didn't resemble Honest Vic Donahey at all, except that he also had on a tail coat and striped trousers. He got his start by refusing to let State officials of Ohio turn in expense accounts of 35 cents for potatoes at hotels. The farmers only received 2 cents for the potatoes, he said, and the farmers of Ohio all up and said, "There is a mind."

Now Honest Vic looked just like the labor cartoons of the honest workingman. His election to the Senate, Aleck, is a shining example of how honesty pays, or at least how it pays Vic.

More Hail Wirephoto; Process Is Explained

Minute Light Squares Of Pictures Changed To Electricity.

Here is how it works—the Wirephoto process by which The Post is able to give its readers pictures of news happenings across the continent only a few hours afterward.

To understand the method, which is none the less amazing stripped of its mystery, one must first consider a picture not as a scene on a piece of paper, but as thousands of tiny squares of varying degrees of light.

With that premise, the Wirephoto method may be considered as taking a picture apart into these tiny squares, transmitting the squares by wire after changing them from light to electricity, and then assembling them in their original order.

Stripped of all but its essential principles, the process is this. A tiny beam of light, 1-100-inch square strikes the upper left-hand corner of a print of the picture which is being sent. This light is reflected from the tiny spot on the picture to a photoelectric cell.

This photoelectric cell has the property of turning light into electricity. The amount of strength of the electricity which the cell makes depends upon the intensity of the light which strikes it. In other words, if the tiny square of the picture from which the light is reflected is dark, the cell will make a smaller current than if the square were very light.

This current, which is the reflected light from one small square of the original photograph, is then carried by wires to the receiving station. There the current operates a shutter which varies in width with the amount of current. This shutter permits light to shine through and strike the same position on a negative as the beam of light at the sending end struck the original photograph.

The shutter is nearly closed when the electrical impulse is small and wide when it is large. Thus, on the negative, there is produced the same light value that the reflected light from the original picture possessed.

This completes the sending of a little square of 1-100 of an inch. One little piece, the upper left-hand corner of a photograph has been reproduced miles away on a sensitive negative. The next step is to send, in the same way, the next little piece to the right. This is repeated, across and back, until the entire photograph has been reproduced piecemeal upon the negative.

When the process is finished, the negative is developed into a photograph which hardly can be distinguished from the original.

In the actual sending of a photo each impulse—each light value from the original—follows on the other's heels. Both the picture and the negative are placed on revolving cylinders, their motions synchronized. There is complete synchronization at the sending and receiving ends so that each piece of the picture is built up in the order that it is taken apart.

The electrical impulses of the photoelectric cells, being very slight, have to be amplified. At the receiving end, filters sift out the extra current and use only the original value.

The cylinders at each end operate at a speed of 100 revolutions per minute. So the apparatus is able to transmit more than 11 square inches of a photograph in a single minute.

Thus only a few minutes after the signal button is pressed in San Francisco and a picture put on the revolving cylinder there a negative is stripped off the receiving cylinder in Washington, developed in a dark room, printed, and is ready to be used in The Post in the morning.

Educators, Federal And Business Leaders Add Praise For Post.

The Post continued to get favorable comments for its new Wirephoto service yesterday. Washingtonians, prominent in the city's official, commercial and civic life, again praised the news pictures, which The Post is able to print only a few hours after the actual happenings. Some of the comments follow:

SENATOR WHEELER, of Montana: "I think it's an excellent service. It's a wonderful thing to be able to print pictures right along with the news so that people can visualize more easily what is taking place."

SENATOR DAVIS of Pennsylvania: "The Wirephoto is a very fine service and one of the new things the American people are bound to appreciate. It was the logical step in journalism."

SENATOR-ELECT GUFFEY of Pennsylvania: "I think it will change the whole trend of modern journalism. In a political campaign, one good picture is worth a hundred arguments, and I believe this will be true in the case of news articles. Pictures will convey the truth of the situation better than words can do."

JOHN GARLAND POLLARD, director of the Board of Veterans' Appeals and former Governor of Virginia—"It is the greatest development in the newspaper world since the perfection of the linotype machine."

Other Government officials who commented included:

MICHAEL J. McDERMOTT, chief of the Division of Current information of the State Department: "I witnessed the careful tests of Wirephoto being made in New York and was most enthusiastic about the clarity of the reproductions and the amazing invention that made eight-minute transmission possible. I am happy that newspaper readers can now share my appreciation of a tremendous scientific advance."

A. E. DEMARAY, associate director of the National Park Service: "I was especially impressed by the Rose Bowl pictures in today's Post. After listening to the radio broadcast of the game yesterday, it gave me a thrill to see pictures of actual plays right along with the sports report. Wirephoto service marks a tremendous advance in the newspaper field."

HUGH L. KERWIN, director of the Labor Department's Conciliation Service: "There is an unlimited field for the use of Wirephoto service, I believe. As a daily reader of The Post, I think it has added a service to readers which is astounding."

JOSEPH KAUFMANN, manager of The Young Men's Shop—"It is with great interest that I have watched the development of The Post. Securing the Wirephoto service is a signal advance for this newspaper. The Post is to be congratulated."

M. G. GIBBS, president of Peoples Drug Stores, Inc.—"The Wirephoto process must be a wonderful thing. It surely is a great step forward—to be able to print news pictures at the same time that stories of the events they show are printed. Mr. Eugene Meyer is giving Washington a great newspaper."

HENRY GRATTAN DOYLE, dean of the Senior College of Letters and Sciences of George Washington University—"I enjoyed the first Wirephoto pictures and was amazed at their fidelity."

THE REV. RUSSELL J. CLINCHY, pastor of the Mt. Pleasant Congregational Church—"This is an outstanding achievement of newspaper enterprise and one more instance of the manner in which The Post is presenting Washington and the Nation with an unparalleled service of accurate and impartial news reporting."

JAMES G. YADEN, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations: "I am very pleased with this new service of The Post."

THE REV. RUFUS WEAVER, executive secretary of the Baptist Association—"It is the most remarkable achievement of the century as far as the quick gathering of news is concerned."

From the executive offices of Georgetown University came the comment that "the Wirephoto pictures which appeared in The Post yesterday show a marked fidelity—this new Associated Press service is a great journalistic advance."

Rejuvenating Paris

Gay Paree has gone stale. Mistinguett's legs? They're the same as they were 50 years ago. They still kick five feet ten and a half . . . no more, no less. The Folies Bergere? Not an innovation in years. The romantic Latin Quarter? The studios have "To Rent" signs, and the artists' models have taken to clothes. Montmartre and Montparnasse cabarets are tombs. The Apaches have slunk back into the alleys with their gigolettes. The girl from Maxim's seems to have aged. Paris is tired.

But here's news . . . the French Capital is going to make a serious effort to be gay again . . . and it looks like it may work. F. S. Fendrick tells you about it, and also brings to light some of the most fascinating stories which ever had their beginning within the shadow of the Eiffel Tower. Don't miss it . . . in the

Scheme Of Things

By

Wm. Lyon Phelps

IN Emerson's essay of Napoleon, after giving an appraisal of his good and evil qualities, Emerson explains why this great military genius failed to control Europe. "It was not Bonaparte's fault. He did all that in him lay, to live and thrive without moral principle. It was the nature of things, the eternal law of the man and the world, which balked and ruined him; and the result, in a million experiments, would be the same."

No individual, no community, no nation, unless it is in harmony with the scheme of things, can endure; superior force is not enough.

* * * *

Most of us believe in the permanence of truth. No matter how much we may love a thing or an idea or a belief, if it is not true, it will not last. Copernicus wrought a greater miracle than Joshua; for Joshua commanded the sun to stand still for one day; but in the year 1543 Copernicus told the sun to stand still forever, and it has not moved for nearly 400 years. It took over a century to convince the world from the deathbed of Copernicus; but the Ptolemaic theory was dead even though not buried.

If we stop to think why it is that truth is permanent we gain renewed hope in the scheme of things. Browning has been often attacked for making Pippa say

God's in his Heaven,
All's right with the world!

But he was merely stating a natural law; the law of truth and morality is like the law of gravitation; people may not like it, but if they try to go against it, they will find the results unsatisfactory.

* * * *

But not only is the scheme of things on the side of truth and righteousness, the scheme of things is not merely passive; it is active. It calls to us at more or less frequent intervals. This is the meaning of the 139th Psalm; it is the meaning of Thompson's poem, "The Hound of Heaven."

Fortunate are those individuals who manage their lives so that they will be in harmony with the scheme of things.

Overton 'Doing Well,' Says His Physician

Baltimore, Jan. 3 (AP).—John H. Overton, United States Senator from Louisiana, is "doing very well" in the Johns Hopkins Hospital today, but his attending physician declared it will be several weeks before he will be permitted to leave.

Dr. L. W. Barker, cardiac specialist who is treating the Senator, stated that a prolonged rest is needed by the patient.

Mrs. Overton has come to Baltimore and makes daily visits to her husband.

Recovery Real Issue Before New Congress

Politically Doomed If Relief And Reform Do Not Bring Revival By 1936.

By Elliott Thurston.

REAL recovery must come during the life of the new Congress or it is doomed. The last Congress could, and did, occupy itself with relief and reform. This Congress must have a recovery in order to save its political life.

A great body of opinion in this country, including many New Deal sympathizers, holds that much of the relief and reform program of the last Congress definitely blocked recovery. The enormous sums appropriated for relief and the undoubted reckless squandering of much money created most of the alarm over the budget and the currency.

Everybody who has thought about it at all has wondered when and how the spending could be checked. For that reason the most important thing to know in connection with the new Congress is what Mr. Roosevelt's budget will be, and whether he means to fight to hold to it. For big though it is sure to be, powerful groups in Congress will try to make it bigger.

The often-asked question of whether Mr. Roosevelt can control Congress involves two questions. The first is, "on what?" And the second is, "how?" He can control Congress on most issues. The only ones on which there is serious doubt involve spending. The last Congress overrode his veto of the independent offices bill. Mr. Roosevelt vetoed it on the ground that it exceeded budget estimates and that no provision was made for new taxes to provide the extra money needed to restore veterans' compensation.

* * * *

THOUGH Senate Republicans were the loudest is decrying wild spending, not a single one of them voted to sustain the veto. The alibis were profuse. The fact remained that not even Mr. Roosevelt's most violent critics on the spending issue would stand up and vote with him when a test came.

Generally speaking, Congress will be disposed to spend even more than the Administration, and to override the President on the bonus or other hand-outs to voters. The next question is whether Mr. Roosevelt will fight or compromise. Many observers think he is less inclined to compromise now, not only because his prestige was enhanced at the last election, but because the time for compromise is past. It is past because it is all-important for the Administration to have recovery without any more delay—and continued compromise, however justified in emergency, adds tremendously to the fears and hazards that delay recovery.

While Mr. Roosevelt was getting his emergency program through, it was important to control rather than to combat Congress. It is no longer so important to control—or, rather, it has become more important to combat the spenders than to compromise with them. The country will unquestionably rally behind the President with vast enthusiasm and a great resurgence of confidence if he goes to the mat with the bonusites, greenbackers, silverites, Townsend-planners and other blocs bent on quick and certain ruin of the Nation's credit. Compromise with them at this stage would revive all the worst fears for the future.

There are hopeful signs that the New Deal is less disposed to make war on bankers, business and the old political order and more disposed to turn to battling the real forces which are holding up recovery. There must be more than signs and hopes, however. The Congress which met yesterday furnishes the immediate battleground.

* * * *

MR. ROOSEVELT'S control is the more certain now because Congress needs recovery just as much as the New Deal does. A Congress, it is true, might buy its way back to another term. It might spend enough on thoughtless voters to get their votes once more. Even that is open to doubt from the political standpoint. And from the economic standpoint, it is certain and complete disaster. Those responsibile for it would in the end bring down on their heads a sure and deadly retribution.

If by 1936 business still languishes, heavy industry remains prostrate, the capital markets continue to be hog-tied and paralyzed, new building and construction still stagnate, one-eighth or more of the population are on relief of one sort or another, the national debt is still out of control—then both the New Deal and its Congress will be easy marks for a live, realistic opposition, whatever its name. The New Deal will have flopped even if it lingers on in office. Certainly the present membership of Congress will stand little show at the polls.

In other words, the best chance this Congress has to survive politically is to have a recovery genuinely underway before the 1936 elections. This means that spending must be brought under control, that handouts for everybody must stop, that any more major operations should wait until the patient has recovered from the recent and in many cases doubtless urgent and necessary ones.

If the patient, which might be called the American economic system, is killed, then those responsible for its death are, through politically. Relief and reform were paramount in the last Congress. Recovery is of first importance for this one.

Parody Contest Offers Chance To Versifiers

Tiny of Shoreham Wants Some More Lyrics for 'You're the Top.'

By Kay Ware.

Tiny is going to have a contest. He offers the prize of two champagne cocktails to the writer of the best parody lyric to "You're the Top." Tiny, if he needs an introduction, is a singer at the Shoreham Lounge.

"I've memorized all there are," he says, "and I've written three or four lyrics myself, but I'm getting tired of it. I won't be happy until I have at least 25 memorized."

So, here's a chance for versifiers to get famous. To get into the spirit of the thing, why not go out and hear Tiny's newest verse. Here are the words:

"You're the top, you're the Union Station,
You're the top, you're the Swiss Legation,
You're inflated dough, you're a bet to show or win;
You're a White House lunch, a planter's punch, you're aspirin.
You're a fight in the Griffith Stadium,
You're the light from an ounce of radium—
I'm baloney in Smithsonian—a fop,
But if, baby, I'm the bottom—you're the top!"

Shoreham floor show: Earl Lindsay's Revue of Ten Hollywood Glorified Girls. Six Hassan Trojans, speed and balance dancers, the Theodores, dance trio, Ewen Hail, m. c.

Danny Rogers, dancer, was a newsboy in the streets of Albany, discovered by Lindsay. Theodores just back from Hollywood.

Pilgrims Club offers a new dance team, Maurine and Norva, both of Italian-French extraction. Norva did the rhumba in "Viva Villa." In private life they are Mr. and Mrs. Leo La Gizzi. Norva is dark-haired and beautiful, Maurine, a suitable partner, is dark-haired and handsome.

Helen Lloyd, personality singer, is another feature at the club.

If you haven't heard Grace Morgan at Club l'Hiver, you've missed a bright spot in night club life. She sits at the piano, accompanies herself, and puts real originality into "Hands Across the Table." Hear her version of "I'll Follow My Secret Heart." Also, don't miss the song written for her, "Laziest Gal in Town." Nothing personal, of course.

Bill Scully and band offer the smartest type of New York music. Billy incidentally got his first stage job with Dick Powell in Pittsburgh. Dick sang, Billy danced. This band leader, who looks too young to be so versatile, m. c.'s the show, sings vocal interludes. He plays sax, piano accordion and clarinet.

The bartender, supervising the management of the Crystal Bar, is one of the old school, mustache and all.

Did you get a dog New Year's Eve? They were passing them around as favors, and fights almost started, so many folks wanted so many more dogs. An original idea, to say the least.

Troika's show: Fifteen Russian Gypsys, including five girls from the Fokine ballet, a chorus of ten mixed voices with Russian songs. Boris Yourlo, sword dancer, is back in a new gold and silver costume. Also, the gypsy trio, Madame Achmatova, Jene Bal and Vyacheslaw Momonoff, returned with new songs.

January 7 is Russian Christmas, and there should be a big celebration at Club Troika. Another special occasion was last Tuesday after guests went home, when a family party started. The doorman began giving impersonations of Matt Windsor, and there was general merriment.

Seen at Club Habana: Mrs. Cornelius Crane, of Chicago and New York; Mrs. Samuel K. Martin, Princess Knubbi Knoubour Singh, attired in Occidental style; Col. Arthur I. Webb, Dr. Carlos Sacasa, Dorothy and Ruth Howe, Dr. and Mrs. Robert J. Bosworth.

Show includes Tarrant and Dacita, dance team; Consuelo Flowerton, singer; Billy McIntyre, ditto; Moe Baer and boys.

Madrillon's show: De Carlos and Granada, remembered from "Flying Down to Rio;" Nita Bruno, acrobatic dancer; Brusiloff and versatile gang.

La Paree is all set up about their prize singer going into radio. Marie Fowler came out on top in Kate Smith's recent contest hearing. She is to appear at a local theater soon.

Karen Morley and Charles Vidor appeared at Heigh-Ho the other night. Seemed to enjoy Pete's place and that song that keeps New York on its toes, "Blame It On My Youth." Pete Macias, you remember, has a neat habit of grabbing all the latest tunes before any one else has a chance to hear them.

Seen at Mayflower: Speaker Bryns and several groups of Congressmen.

An odd collection of male attire appeared the other night. In the same party were men in full dress, brown business suit, tux and frock coat with striped trousers. Ladies of the group were more or less consistent in dress.

Hi-Hat has been pretty well filled with Congressmen of late. A couple of nights ago Guffey rooters from Pittsburgh and the Senator himself kept Tony Avila, of the Bofills, busy for more than an hour. No wonder, the Bofills have something different to offer by way of musical fare. Their music is heard at luncheon, cocktail hour and evenings.

When Three Are Not a Crowd

The Theodores, graceful dance team, appear at the Shoreham this week.

Fewer Than Forty Suicide Strikers Remain in Mine

Katowice, Poland, Jan. 3 (AP).—Fewer than 40 miners remained underground at the Baska mine near here today as their strike for continued employment entered its eighth day.

More than half of the total of 80 who started the "suicide strike" last week had given up the fight, and those who carried on were plentifully supplied with food and water. They were not believed to be in any immediate danger.

The strike began when owners decided to abandon the coal shaft 250 feet underground because the quality of the coal was poor.

Wives of the miners yesterday petitioned the government to intervene, saying "our husbands are so stubborn they will die underground if they do not receive work."

'Brother Charlie' Ends 3 Terms as Governor

Lincoln, Nebr., Jan. 3 (AP).—Charles W. Bryan, brother of the Commoner, ended an incumbency of three terms as Governor of Nebraska today with claims of greater tax economy the past four years than in any previous 25 years of Nebraska history. He will retire to his farm.

Gov. Bryan's successor, R. L. Cochran, also a Democrat, was inaugurated at a joint session of the Legislature.

'Corruption' Charged By Los Angeles Jury

Los Angeles, Jan. 3 (AP).—The Los Angeles County Grand Jury today reported to Superior Judge Fletcher Bowron its investigations "reveal a shocking condition of corruption in local government generally."

Its written report did not mention any department of government specifically, but said the grand jury would file detailed data.

Pardon Is Given To Woman Slayer By Mrs. Ferguson

Austin, Tex., Jan. 3 (AP).—Gov. Miriam A. Ferguson granted a full pardon today to Mrs. Mary Boone, given a five-year sentence last October for killing Mrs. Peal Hall.

Mrs. Boone fatally shot Mrs. Hall after she and a woman friend had brought Mrs. Hall to the Boone residence to confront Boone with accusations that he had been having improper relations with Mrs. Hall.

Gov. Ferguson said:

"Let me say, that if women will let other women's husbands alone, crimes like this will never occur, but just so long as bad women do not behave themselves we can expect to read of cases just like this."

Runaway Horse Slain After Striking Truck

A runaway horse was shot and killed by a policeman yesterday after it was injured by a truck near Sherman avenue and Park road northwest.

What good is a dollar on a desert island?

ON a deserted isle your dollar would be practically worthless, because of your inability to exchange it for the things you want and need. Of course, you are not on a desert isle, but the same principle of "dollar value" holds true, nevertheless. For no matter where you happen to be, the value of your dollar depends on the value, to you, of the commodity you can get in exchange for it.

The value of the commodities you get in this exchange depends largely on whether you seek out the places to buy what you want at the lowest prices. That's where the "For Sale Miscellaneous" columns of The Post Classified pages score for you. These columns contain BARGAINS. Every day a new treasure trove at special values. Some are new goods—some used, but perfectly serviceable—all are priced for quick sale below the "market."

Diplomats Entertained At Mansion

Members of Official Set in Galleries as Congress Meets.

Mrs. Roosevelt Sees Mrs. O'Day Take Oath in House.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

The opening of Congress is one of the big days in Capital society, because it means the opening of the official season. And coinciding with the convening of the two Houses was the first State reception of the season given last night in the White House in honor of the members of the diplomatic corps.

In the Senate the galleries as well as the floor were crowded with newcomers and veterans, and looking down from the Senate ladies gallery, one saw the new members, very much like young boys on their first day at school, being piloted through the routine of Senate procedure. Senator W. Warren Barbour, with his beautiful wife, entered the gallery with his junior colleague, Senator A. Harry Moore, former Governor of New Jersey, and Mrs. Moore.

Both ladies looked exceedingly handsome. Mrs. Barbour was in black, with a high Russian hat of Persian lamb, and a coat to match trimmed with sable. Mrs. Moore was in brown with a handsome mink coat, and a large shoulder bouquet of lavender and yellow orchids. Senator Moore wore a bright red carnation in his buttonhole, and many wondered if he is going to be a rival of Senator Royal S. Copeland, of New York, who for so many years has appeared daily with a fresh boutonniere. Mrs. Copeland was also in the gallery with a group of friends and wore a black costume with a small hat to match trimmed with minktails.

Mrs. Borah Attends Opening.

Mrs. William E. Borah was there to watch her famous husband as he sat quietly to answer the roll call; also Mrs. Key Pittman, wife of the present chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee. She wore a black satin ensemble with handsome silver fox furs, and a small black hat.

Mr. J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency, arrived early with a party of friends and was seen greeting Mr. Raymond T. Baker, former director of the mint, who also had a number of friends with him. Senator Arthur Capper, of Kansas, escorted a group of friends to the gallery, and, after remaining a few minutes to chat with them, returned to the floor.

Senator Bronson Cutting, who won a hard race in New Mexico, was a striking figure on the floor, in a brown tweed suit with a blue shirt and collar, the white streak in his hair showing plainly.

Mrs. Warren Austin, wife of the Republican Senator from Vermont, was with friends, and wore a black and white frock with a soft, black velvet hat, and a handsome mink coat. Others in the gallery were Mrs. Wilton J. Lambert, whose father, Senator Gorman, represented Maryland for many years; Mrs. Walter George, wife of the Senator from Georgia, in a brown ensemble, and Mrs. Frederick Steiwer, wife of Senator Steiwer, with her brother, Commander Rush.

Over in the House there was an even larger crowd, for wives of nearly all the new Representatives and their families made up the colorful assembly in the galleries. Mrs. Roosevelt was there to see her friend, Mrs. Caroline O'Day, take the oath of office. Accompanying the First Lady were Miss Marian Dickerman and Miss Nancy Cook. In the executive gallery Mrs. Homer S. Cummings, wife of the Attorney General, was present with several guests, and in the Speaker's row was Mrs. Joseph W. Byrns, wife of the Representative from Tennessee, who was elected yesterday. Nearby sat Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, widow of the former Speaker of the House, always a familiar figure in the galleries of the Senate and House. Mrs. Longworth returned Monday to be here for the convening of Congress. She wore a costume of navy blue wool, with a smart trimmed hat of the same material, trimmed with a quill.

Micheli; Mrs. Lothrop Stoddard, Mrs. Eugene Meyer, Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, Mrs. Hans Kindler, Mrs. George Morris, Mrs. Vinton Chapin and Mrs. Donald Richberg.

The ceremony, which took place in the home of the bridegroom's brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Porter Davidson, of Washington, was private, although the couple greeted many of their Pinehurst friends at a wedding breakfast in the Davidson home later.

Mrs. Davidson, mother of the bridegroom, is the former Miss Betty Hanna, of Cleveland, granddaughter of the late Mark Hanna.

The Rev. Murray S. Howland, D. D., of Binghampton, N. Y., officiated at the ceremony.

The improvised altar was decorated with Madonna lilies and lilies of the valley. The house was decorated with white lilies, lilies of the valley and white snapdragons.

Miss Statler wore a white satin gown with an Elizabethan collar. Her cap was of white net with a band of orange blossoms. She carried white orchids.

Deb's Diary

Who, What and Where —as She Sees It.

DEAR DIARY:

At Marjorie Walsh's party Tuesday afternoon—in one corner I ran into Kay Fechet, who was wearing a black frock with the daintest of pleated cream satin collars, and a wee saucy black hat. Not far away stood Imogene Ficklen—in black with a lame blouse which was finished at the neck with a tricky bow, chatting with Gerard Guilfoyle.

The assembled guests were so many that as the old saying goes, "You could not see the woods for the trees"—however, just before leaving I did see and pass the time of day with Billy Mitchell and Jimmie Bucheister.

Mary Senate Howes and Don Rubles have started a club, the name, nature and requirements for membership of which remain a deep, dark mystery. They have enlisted some ten members, who are just as reluctant at giving information as the original two.

Speaking of Don reminds me of the recent party when he and Jack Gregory got together at the piano and entertained the rest of us with their duet. When they had seemingly exhausted their repertoire, Betty Cremen succeeded them to the bench and continued with the concert. As she finished, the two Californians (that's where they are from; ask them about the Golden Gate of the Campanile) reminded of other pieces they had neglected took another turn at the keys and so it went, on and on, much to our enjoyment.

Capitol Hill Teems With Activity on Opening Day of Seventy-Fourth Congress

Members of Speaker's Family And Secretary Are 'Thrilled'

Judge McReynolds Presents Facsimile of Tennessee Capitol to Representative Byrns; Woman Photographer Goes Into Action.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

TWO HOURS before Congress convened yesterday, Capitol Hill was in a buzz of activity. Members greeted old friends, made new acquaintances, and dropped into the House restaurant for a cup of coffee and a chat before going upstairs. Flocks of visitors stepped out of taxis and waited for elevators to take them up to the main floor where things were already beginning to happen.

On the floor, newsreel cameramen, their paraphernalia already set up, were making last-minute preparations for the big event. Margaret Bourke-White, noted woman photographer, was definitely in action. Dressed in a black-belted, red frock, her dark, bobbed hair flying as her head ducked under and out from under the focusing cloth of her camera, she moved her camera about with the dexterity of a photographer twice her size, made her "shots" of the Speaker and other officials, finished, and was well out of the way by the time the clock in the House struck the noon hour.

Presented by McReynolds.

In the meantime an important event was taking place in the Speaker's rooms. After posing for Miss White, the rangy Tennessean was presented with a facsimile of the Tennessee State Capitol, a work of art, flag-crowned, in white beaverboard, supported by silver columns and decorated with white anemone, chrysanthemums, scarlet euphorbia, spruce and statice.

The facsimile, sent by the Speaker's friends in his home county, was presented to him by his campaign manager, Judge Sam McReynolds, in the presence of a few friends and the Speaker's family.

Mrs. Byrns, one of the most charming of the long list of Speakers' wives, was attired in a black broadcloth suit trimmed in Persian lamb. Orchids on her left shoulder, white kid gloves and a quill-trimmed black hat pulled low over her silver hair completed her costume.

"How does it feel to be the wife of the Speaker?" she was asked.

"How does it feel?" She paused before answering, breathed deeply and smiled, "It's great. This is one of the happiest days of my life."

The Speaker's son, Joseph W. Byrns, jr., admitted also, it was a high point for him. Standing beside his attractive wife just before they posed for pictures, he said, "Sure, I'm thrilled—as much as I've ever been in my life."

His wife was attired in a red boucle tunic over a wine velvet skirt and a red hat.

Speaker's Secretary Thrilled.

Other members of the Speaker's family later seated in the Speaker's gallery were the wives of his two brothers, who also live here.

Another person who was obviously thrilled at the occasion was the Speaker's secretary, Mrs. Margaret Robertson, who posed with the Speaker for a number of pictures and then proudly watched him take office.

"Of course I'm happy that my boss is the new Speaker," she said frankly. "Who wouldn't be? But I'll tell you this much, I'm not one of those secretaries who take half the credit when their employers achieve a high position.

"I know the Speaker is where he is today because of his ability, and I'm just grateful because I've had the privilege of being his secretary for 13 years."

The little group in the Speaker's rooms dispersed just before Congress convened, as the spotlight was shifted from the Speaker's rooms to the Senate and the House.

Gallery Seats Soon Filled.

Over at the Senate end of the Capitol a long queue had waited—and waited, to be admitted to the gallery.

"But I have a card," groaned a short woman of generous proportions and booming voice as she pushed forward against a guard.

"So does the woman behind you and those in front," snapped the guard, "but the galleries aren't open yet."

When they finally were opened, seats were filled within a few minutes, all except a few of those in the Diplomatic gallery and the front row of the President's gallery.

On the floor there was every type of attire imaginable, from formal morning dress to ordinary business suits. There was Senator Sheppard from Texas in a cutaway coat, striped trousers and a wing collar. There was Senator Cutting in a russet business suit. There was the newly elected Senator Bilbo in a cutaway and striped trousers, and Senator La Follette in a blue street suit. There was Senator Connally with his characteristic flowing tie and Senator Lewis, noted for his sartorial smartness, in a brown suit with a beige vest, harmonizing shirt and brown tie.

Senator Caraway in Black.

Senator Hattie Caraway, in a black boucle with just a touch of white at the throat, sat quietly at her desk, apparently enjoying the hum of activity around her.

The buzz in the Senate and the hilarity aroused by the reading of a telegram from Senator Long was tame in comparison with the roll calls, elections, hand-clapping and hand-shaking going on over in the House.

The women in the House attracted much favorable attention from the gallery, both by their modest demeanor and by their attractive attire.

On the front row of the Democratic side of the House was Mrs. Virginia Jenckes, of Indiana. Dressed in black silk, she wore red camelias on her left shoulder. Her hair arranged coronet fashion, she was one of the most distinguished figures on the floor.

Near her was Mrs. Mary T. Norton, of New Jersey, also in black and wearing orchids.

Mrs. O'Day Glimpsed.

"Where's Mrs. O'Day?" whispered some one in the gallery.

"There she is, with the lorgnette," some one else replied.

A former member of Congress, Mrs. Kathryn O'Loughlin McCarthy, sat near the back of the chamber until after the election of the Speaker, when she moved closer in order to hear his speech.

On the Republican side was Mrs. Edith Nourse Rogers, dressed in a blue fur-trimmed dress and wearing orchids which increased in number after the opening of the session, when a messenger arrived with a box from the florist.

On the row behind Mrs. Rogers was Mrs. Florence Kahn in a black dress and white gardenias.

The only missing woman in Congress was Mrs. Isabella Greenway, who is in Chicago.

Mrs. Roosevelt Arrives.

Women on the floor of the House went out of the spotlight when Mrs. Roosevelt and her party arrived and took seats in the President's gallery.

In the Speaker's gallery was Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, familiar figure at Congress openings. Attired in dark blue with a felt hat pulled low over her eyes and wearing a gray scarf and gloves, the wife of a former Speaker watched with much interest and remained much longer than Mrs. Roosevelt, who left shortly after the first roll call.

As the Speaker was sworn in, attention shifted from galleries, from members of Congress, to the new Speaker and new routine of business that will make up the Seventy-fourth Congress.

Pillbox Shape Hats in Vogue As Crowns Dip

Stitched Taffeta, Grosgrain and Felt Are Leading Mediums.

CHICAGO, Jan. 1 (AP).—With the new year, a woman's fancy seriously turns to thoughts of a new hat.

As every woman knows the best antidote for that after-the-holiday let-down is a new bonnet—especially a gay colored one. It does wonders for a winter wardrobe of black, brown or blue that is beginning to pull down the corners of the feminine soul.

New headgear for the Southbound resorter is one thing, but for the wearer who must yet weather wintry days, quite another. For the latter the new styles are mostly small and perky. They are without wide brims to interfere with high fur collars.

Gay Colors Are Worn.

Most of the new hats, intended to be worn "right now" in Northern climes, are black or brown and they derive their up-to-dateness from style or ornament. But for the color-loving there are gay top pieces in red, green and a new, vivid blue.

One characteristic of the new midseasonal millinery is its gleam and shine. Into straws and silks are interwoven glistening strands of cellulose paper.

Stitched taffeta is another prominent medium, as is grosgrain ribbon. Felt, of course, is a top-notcher in materials.

The Russian toque of winter has been toned down, as have all high crowns in general. There is a trend toward little pert pillboxes. Many of the new numbers rise to a peak and then fan out visor-like over the face. There are many new off-the-face models.

Here's one of the new scooped out crowns. You're sure to see lots of them before the season is many weeks older. They are the milliners' smartest compromise between high and low crowns. The one illustrated is stitched in silk yarn, a brand new trimming.

Indian Woman Achieves Fame In Pottery Art

A PUEBLO Indian woman, Marie Martinez, is receiving world fame in art circles for her pottery. She has just been awarded the achievement medal of the Indian Council Fire, being the first Indian woman to receive it, and her shining black pottery is being displayed on the shelves of noted museums.

Marie and her husband, Julian, 15 years ago discovered a new way to decorate and fire black pottery. As a result, pottery making became the chief industry in her little pueblo of San Ildefonso in the valley of the Rio Grande.

Now, the Christian Science Monitor reports, crowds of tourists drive over the sandy arroyas to see the potters at work. Since it is not according to the Indian code of ethics for Indian men to make pottery, the men paint the designs and the women mold the clay into shapely bowls.

Marie, who is a full-blooded Tewan Indian, usually works kneeling before a little box, which is her work table. Her only tools are a little stone and some pieces of a gourd like small shells. Julian, who is known as a master painter of Indian design, sits on a low stool with his knees stuck up in front of him. For his brush he uses the spear of the yucca plant.

For centuries—before Marie and Julian began experimenting—Indians had made pottery bowls, but they were mostly kitchen pots. Black pottery had been made, but when it was fired the design disappeared in the process.

U.S. Too Timid In Peace Moves, Mrs. Catt Says

Pacifist Urges Brake on Talk and Preparations for War.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3 (AP).—Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, once leader of the suffrage cause and now dean of women pacifists, believes the United States "might be a little bolder" in showing the world the road to peace.

Surveying the prospects for peace during 1935, the 76-year-old crusader frankly said "there aren't any."

But she asserted none the less that "the abolition of war is the greatest next change that will come in the history of the human race."

"The United States," she said, "might be a little bolder in its claims about peace. It might talk and prepare less for war. It might show the world—which it has not yet done—that its intent is to keep the peace and join those nations that are willing to end war.

War Talk Condemned.

"There is a good deal of talk in certain quarters about war with Japan. That war is entirely unnecessary, and if it ever comes the United States will be quite as much to blame as Japan.

"Both governments are quarreling, and quarrels lead to war. They ought never to try to settle anything when one of them is angry. People should wait until the one who is angry has recovered before they begin dissertations, and the same applies to governments."

While Mrs. Catt believes the World Court will not end war, she said that for the United States to enter that tribunal would be a "useful step."

"It is foolish for us to stay out of the World Court," she asserted. "The idea of the World Court was ours, and we pressed it far and wide before the Great War. Then when it was taken up by other people, we wouldn't go in."

"This looks perfectly ridiculous to other nations. They can't believe we are peaceful-minded after the way we behaved about the World Court, and the same applies to the League of Nations.

"But I want to make it very clear I don't think either the League of Nations or the World Court will answer the question of settling war. We may have thought so once, but not any more."

Heredity Governs Future of Child, Scientist Holds

The old argument over environment and heredity is on again. This time as a result of psychologists' experiments with adopted children, environment is likely to be the loser. In reporting the proceedings Science Service recently said that the experiments thus far prove that heredity is much more important than environment to a child's intelligence.

Elaborate precautions have been taken by the psychologists so that the true value of environment may be learned. In describing the experiments to the American Statistical Association in Chicago recently, Dr. Alice M. Leahy, of the Institute of Child Welfare, University of Minnesota, said:

"If further analysis supports the tentative results we must conclude that the influence of environment on measured intelligence is relatively insignificant."

This BUSINESS of LIVING

Woman Wishes to Devote Leisure Hours to Volunteer Social Work.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: After years of wishing to be of some active service to people who need help, I know no more how to begin than if I had never thought of it. Twice I have made an effort to find an opening in organized social service activities, only to be blocked at the beginning because I have no college degree.

* * * *

I am not a pusher, but rather shy, which may account for my previous failures to find an opening. For many years it has seemed to me that there was nothing which I could do especially well, but recently I have wakened to the realization that I have overlooked something. I can read aloud—well. My voice is pleasing. I can meet strangers graciously. I like old people and they like me.

* * * *

Do you suppose there are blind people who would like to be read to, once or twice a week? Or perhaps a group of old people? If you can help me to make a contact of this kind, I shall appreciate your effort.

* * * *

I am the mother of a 14-year-old youngster. I have a home and a husband. We are thoroughly respectable people. I have some free afternoon hours that I prefer to spend usefully if possible.

Yours very gratefully,
MILLIE.

Call MEtropolitan 2102.

DEAR MILLIE: I suggest you contact either Mrs. Montgomery or Mrs. Goodwin, who conduct a volunteer social service bureau in connection with the District Y. W. C. A., located at Seventeenth and K streets northwest. The telephone number is MEtropolitan 2102, and the office hours are from 10:30 a. m. to 1 p. m.

* * * *

This bureau is affiliated with the district council of social agencies, and I am told that there is every likelihood your volunteer services may be utilized to good effect. I have already left your full name and address with Mrs. Roberts' office, in the Social Service Exchange at 1101 M street northwest, telephone MEtropolitan 2284, and am advised the Y. W. C. A. bureau is the one you should contact.

* * * *

I hope you may find ample opportunity for expressing your altruistic urge, and I think you are to be commended in wishing to devote your leisure time to bringing happiness to other. M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write to her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Teachers Assail Political Test

N. Y. Union Thinks Order for Questionnaire Goes Too Far.

THE TEACHERS UNION of New York thinks the board of education is going a little too far when it expects teachers to submit to questionnaires on loyalty and political beliefs.

The president of the board recently asked the board of examiners to formulate the additional tests for teachers.

Said the Teachers Union in a resolution:

"The board of examiners failed to maintain its professional dignity by accepting without justification the order to assist in the formulation of a political test as a qualification for new teachers."

"Whatever the vague purposes of the questionnaire may be it is certain that one effect will be to regiment still further the minds of teachers and through fear of official reprisal to prevent the development of independent thinking among alert-minded teachers on important social issues."

Mexico to Protect Employed Women

Decree Bans Perilous and Unsuitable Jobs.

Employed women in Mexico are to have special protection under a recent decree issued by the Mexican government.

The decree bars the employment of women on premises in which motor-driven or other machinery is in operation if the dangerous parts of the machinery are not adequately covered by a protective screen; in underground or submarine work; in the sale of alcoholic liquor to be consumed on the premises; in the production management or sale of licentious publications prohibited by law, in the case of adult women, or publications offensive to modesty, in the case of girls under age; in night work with exceptions for women over 16 employed in certain commercial undertakings such as hotels, restaurants, cafes, pastry-cooks shops, sweet shops, theaters and cinemas; or in industrial operations of an unhealthy character.

Mrs. O'Day Calls Congress A Cauldron of Confusion

But It's the Grandest Place on Earth, New Member Adds, While Others of Sex Greet Old Friends at Opening Session.

A THRILLING cauldron of confusion—but the grandest place on earth! That was how Caroline O'Day, representative-at-large from New York State, described her impression of the lower house, after her first day's experience as a member.

"It is going to be a little difficult to become adjusted to all the rules and regulations," she said smiling. "But every one has been so kind and helpful. It makes me hope more than ever that I may prove worthy of the honor of serving in Congress."

The personification of poise, as she sat through yesterday morning's preliminaries, lorgnette held before her large blue eyes, Mrs. O'Day later disclaimed any such feeling.

"I was a little frightened at first," she said, her fingers toying with a long chain necklace. "The lights and cameras and strange faces were a trifle disconcerting. Then I literally became enveloped in the chaos and confusion which seem to characterize all House sessions. Suddenly I began to discover friendly faces smiling at me from all directions—even some from my home town, Rye, N. Y. Before adjournment, it seemed quite homey in there, in spite of the noise."

Daughter Attends Session.

One of the "friendly faces" was that of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, who sat in the front row of the executive gallery.

Another face that beamed down upon her was that of her daughter, Elia, chic in dark tweed skirt, scarlet suede waistcoat and black hat. Reluctant to take advantage of her friendship with the Roosevelts, Miss O'Day sought a seat in one of the less-conspicuous galleries and contented herself with peeping around the shoulders of the other occupants at the proceedings. Her mother, a little annoyed, was not able to locate her until after the session.

If one's first term is thrilling, one's second one bids fair to be more satisfying, according to Mrs. Virginia Jenckes, who obviously enjoyed greeting old friends before and during the opening session.

"Last year I spent a good deal of time learning how to do things," she said. "This year I shall be able to work more effectively, because experience has opened up the way more clearly for me. I'm truly grateful to be back again."

Mrs. Jenckes is especially interested in finding ways and means for private industry to absorb the unemployed. She will devote much of her time and energy to this problem during the session, she says.

Mrs. Rogers Greets Friends.

Bubbling over with characteristic good humor, Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, of Massachusetts, expressed enthusiasm over the prospect of plunging into her sixth consecutive term in Congress, as she shook hands with friends.

"Things move so swiftly these days," she said, "that we seem never to be able to catch up on our work. Each session brings a deluge of new problems. But that's what makes Congress so intriguing. I know I'm going to enjoy it more this year even than I have in the past."

"It's grand to be back again!" exclaimed Representative Florence Kahn, who, after 35 years attending sessions in Congress, regards Capitol Hill as her second home. Exchanging witticisms with other veterans during the morning session, Mrs. Kahn probably had her hand shaken more times than any other member of the House. Dressed in customary black silk crepe, the California Representative wore a corsage of gardenias on her shoulder. She waggled her finger humorously as camera lights flickered her way.

Consider Baby A Friend, Says Parents' Paper

Child Quickly Responds to Sympathy, Opinion of Authority.

BABIES are people! They are not little wild animals to be tamed and broken, nor are they small antagonists to be opposed. That's that, in the opinion of no less an authority than the Parents' Magazine. In the latter's January issue a thoughtful analysis of what is involved in teaching small children obedience, self-control and respect for the rights of others draws the conclusion that if father and mother treat the smallest member of the family as a dear friend he will respond increasingly to their expectations.

In dealing with people you love you try to pay as much attention as possible to their preferences, show them courtesy, avoid friction. If you must steer your course other than the way they have chosen, you do not adopt a punishing attitude toward your friends. You simply do the thing you think best and explain your actions. Why not do even so with baby?

Can't Fool Child.

You may fool some of the people some of the time, but if the Parents' Magazine is correct you seldom fool your offspring. By the time he is six months old, not only will you have to begin to know him, his individuality, his virtues and his failings, but he will have begun to know you as well. Baby will know the best of you, your tender care and solicitude. But alas, he will also begin to know the worst of you.

What about the bad temper some babies seem to be born with? That's a question. Bad temper is worse than a disease.

Bad Temper a Problem.

The surest cure is to be careful to remove all irritating causes, and be calm during baby's "big moment." Howling is another of those things that causes motherly anguish. There are a number of pleasures baby may be howling for—the moon, perhaps, but more usually for food or a drink of water, or his voice may be lifted in protest against cold, wet undies, or perhaps he is tired of lying on his back and wishes to turn over. Why deny baby the courtesy of finding out just what is the matter? To rock or not to rock an infant? The writers uphold grandmother's old-fashioned but sensible point of view and condone an occasional gentle joggling. When baby sucks his thumb, don't jerk it out of his rosebud mouth. Just call his attention, say, to a piece of zwieback. Diversion, at this point, is the answer.

Dash Supplied By New Scarfs, Women Believe

Brighten Up Somber Frocks, Also Serve as Collars for 1935 Wearers.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

SCARFS continue to gain in popularity as the season advances. They continue to come in more and more fantastic designs, in brilliant colors, and in unusual styles. And no sooner have they come than they are gone. A buyer for neckwear in a local store reports scarfs one of her swiftest-moving items.

There are things that soar to popularity on false pretenses, but not scarfs. They serve so many purposes and do so much good in decorative and practical ways that their following is more than justified.

Scarfs brighten up somber frocks. They take the place of collars and they ward off drafts that sneak through your coat collar. They can be worn numerous ways—knot on either side, point in front or back—and give a sprightly touch to one's winter dress.

Two particularly attractive types of scarfs are featured now in a downtown store. One is a heavy black crepe triangle with row after row of white fringe. This is stunning with a black coat. It is equally lovely as a collar. It gives any frock a very dashing something. The same style scarf is available also in blue, brown, green and a combination of colors.

More definitely in the sports class are some scarfs displayed on a neighboring table. These are knitted from a soft boucle and combine about every pattern and color known to man. These scarfs are in long strips and are therefore ideal for making one's coat snug-proof. One of the most attractive of these knit boucles is black and white checked.

Another store is featuring gay little scarfs with hats to match. These are particularly popular with the young high school girls who want to look jaunty in a bright way.

Blasts Beauty Theory.

Some women feel that if they give their skin the proper care, cleanse it, stimulate it and nourish it, and shampoo their hair on schedule they can do little more to enhance their appearance. The contrary is true. A beauty specialist who served her apprenticeship under one of England's finest beauty authorities discovered a cream which she says is ideal for nourishing thin faces and rounding out angular contours.

So often a woman will have lovely features and a badly shaped face. In the majority of cases she doesn't know she can improve the contour. With a jar of this cream she could if she used it consistently and according to directions give her face the firm even contour which goes hand in hand with youth. As soon as she has succeeded in doing this, she will congratulate herself that she looks ten years younger.

Slip in Some Slipperettes.

Easy to carry and easy to wear—the clever little slipperettes featured in a local store. If you're a traveler, off you go for fun or business. Your bag is packed brimful and your slippers are still out. Here's the time the little wool slipperettes save the day. They will slip into the corner and take up no room. And when you want them for use, they're there, comfortable and snug fitting.

For convalescents they are a real modern convenience. They can be worn even in bed, or slipped under the pillow within easy reach. They are available in pastel shades to suit any boudoir ensemble.

For lounging they are simply indispensable. You come home after a hard day of shopping and off go your shoes and on go the slipperettes, softest, warmest, most comfortable things.

They come in all sizes, all colors, and cost very little.

New Lipstick Models.

Compacts and lipsticks come in a lovely ensemble neatly tucked away in a little leather case. You can carry the case in your purse or pocket, as it will fit in a very small space.

Those who have to grope through their bag first for a compact and then for a lipstick know how having them both in one attractive case considerably simplifies things. The case also serves to keep the two from becoming scratched up and broken jarring against other things.

Perfumer Made Safe.

A certain perfumer chose an intriguing name for his equally intriguing perfume—Nuit de Extasse. It comes in queer blocklike wooden boxes that make attractive ornaments on a dressing table. For the woman who has children around, they are extremely convenient, because clumsy, reckless little hands can never break wooden bottles.

Imported Clocks Here.

Smart models of imported clocks are displayed in a downtown store. These are queer looking, plain and severely modernistic with an all-chrome finish. They have alarms that are on the dot.

Profitable Pessimism.

Someone has said that a pessimist is a man who carries his snowshoes along with him in August—"just in case." If that is true, the South player in today's hand would have been wearing his fur coat and beaver hat. The kibitzers all gasped when he made a safety play which only a disciple of Schoppenhauer would deem necessary. They gasped when they saw how vital the play turned out ot be.

North, Dealer.

East and West vulnerable.

The bidding: (Figure after bid refers to numbered explanatory paragraph.)

North	East	South	West
1♣	Pass	2NT	Pass
3NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

1—North feels sure that South has at least a semifit in the club suit so that the clubs will be just as valuable at notrump as at a club declaration. He therefore raises to three notrump.

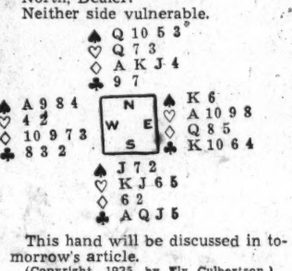
West opened the Jack of spades and dummy hopped up with the Queen to hold first trick. The South player happened to be Herbert Meyer, one of the most colorful of the New York experts. Mr. Meyer has become famous for his propensity to play otherwise dull hands in the wrong suit just to make the game a bit more interesting. This unique habit has fostered in him the conviction that no suit ever breaks.

He looked with an air of deep and dark suspicion at dummy's seven-card club suit, reinforced by his own King-three, and decided to take not the slightest risk that East might get in with a club (as might well happen if he had all four of them) to lead a spade through declarer's King. Mr. Meyer, therefore, led the ten of clubs from the dummy, and when East played low let it ride. This brilliant safety play permitted declarer to make his contract, and a glance at East's hand indicates that without it South would have been set.

Tomorrow's Hand.

North, Dealer.

Neither side vulnerable.



This hand will be discussed in tomorrow's article.

What Today Means

"Capricorn."

IF JANUARY 4 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:45 a. m. to 12:45 p. m., from 3:45 to 5:45 p. m. and from 8:45 to 10:45 p. m. The danger periods are from 8:45 to 10:45 a. m., from 5:45 to 7:45 p. m. and from 10:45 until midnight.

Circumspection is a very essential quality to exercise on this date if mistakes in business and financial transactions are to be avoided. The trend may be to jump too hastily from one thing to another. It might be well to remember, "A thing worth doing is worth doing well." If preparing a trip of any length, it might be advisable to make all arrangements in advance, for haphazard planning is apt to result in complications arising at the last minute.

If you contemplate entertaining friends inconvenience may be avoided if you do not take for granted that someone else has attended to a matter you requested them to. Married and engaged couples, as well as those ready to surrender heart and fortune into another's keeping, will find it a good policy on this date not to try answering a direct personal question evasively.

If a woman and January 4 is your birthday, determination backed by ambition will very likely enable you to overcome some seemingly insurmountable obstacles. Do not let disappointments discourage you, for, like a mist, they will disappear when the sunshine of prosperity and renewed hopes brighten your day. Do not let a desire to make money or achieve fame cause you to overlook the wealth of happiness love can bring into your life. Teaching, lecturing, demonstrating, acting, a sales position requiring the gift of gab, or the stage offer a woman of your versatility an opportunity to win renown.

The child born on January 4, when it passed adolescence, usually evinces a great interest in some particular hobby. This should be encouraged, and under no condition ridiculed.

If a man and January 4 is your natal day, it will probably be your own fault if you do not make a splendid success out of your life, for you have the ability and capacity to accomplish whatever you determine to do. Law, medicine, politics, journalism, as well as commercial lines of activity, may afford you the chance to win laurels. The right woman can not only be a great help both in your social and business career, but should also prove a marvelous comfort and congenial companion in your home life.

Despised Soup Wins New Laurels; Now Is Offered as Main Course

Post Staff Photo.

Oven-proof, peasant earthenware, either individual bowls or a large shallow casserole, will enable the hostess to serve this delicious brown onion soup in traditional French style. Top the soup with toasted French bread or rusks and grated cheese and place in a hot oven until the cheese has browned.

Women Reverting to Their European Ancestors for the Idea.

By Dorothea Duncan.

THE TIMELY appearance of foreign dishes has proclaimed the return of soup to the menu in the most conspicuous place of its American career. It wasn't so long ago that soup was regarded by hostesses as the only dish with which to start off a meal. Then the fickle public adopted canapes and hors d'oeuvres, and the once popular soup was left dangling with no place on the menu.

Women have reverted to their European forefathers for new fashions in food. This is where they unearthed the idea that soup should be served as a main course.

Get out your largest soup bowls and have a soup supper party for the family. Every one is taking up the custom and enjoying it immensely. Saturday evening is the ideal time, for no special reason, except that Saturday always has been a day for unusual dishes. Remember that soup is to be the main feature of the meal and second helpings will be very much in evidence.

If you have need of new soup bowls, investigate the peasant, earthen ware ones that are oven proof. A set includes individual bowls and a large one to match that may be filled and left warming in the oven until the call for second helpings. In either brown or white, the bowls add a charming informal note to your table. These oven-proof bowls are perfectly adapted to serving the soup, which is suggested in the following week-end menus for the Saturday dinner.

The soup is a delicious, fragrant brown onion concoction. It may be made by the following recipe, or a similar soup with an equally good flavor can be purchased in cans from your grocer. If you like to make your own soup, and it is part of the fun, try this recipe.

Onion Soup Gratinee.

3 onions.
3 tablespoons butter
3 pints beef stock
3 tablespoons grated cheese
Salt and pepper.
⅛ clove garlic (if desired)
2 tablespoons chopped parsley
¼ loaf French bread

Slice onions and put them into a stew pan with butter. Stir and fry slowly until softened and slightly browned. Add beef stock, boil ten minutes, skim season and add parsley and garlic. Cut the bread in thin slices, dry in the oven a few minutes, pour soup into above mentioned dishes, put bread on top, sprinkle with grated cheese and set in a very hot oven (450 degrees-

Saturday Evening Ideal Time to Hold Party for the Family.

500 degrees F.) just long enough to brown the cheese. Serve immediately.

A tart cranberry juice cocktail will start off the meal with flying colors. Serve the soup next, accompanied by a salad of cucumbers and lettuce with sour cream dressing, and wind up the meal with deep-dish apple pie and coffee, and milk for the children.

This makes an excellent dressing for vegetable salads. Place the salt, sugar and pepper together in a bowl, mix well and add the lemon juice, then the vinegar. When the mixture is perfectly smooth, put in the cream, stir well and set on the ice until needed.

French Fried Bananas.

Use ripe bananas (ones well flecked with brown and peel and slice paper thin. Fry in deep fat until crisp and serve around broiled ham.

Soak the crumbs in the hot milk until soft, then add the egg yolks mixed with the sugar, pour into a baking dish set in a pan of water, and bake in a slow oven (250 to 350 degrees Fahrenheit) about an hour, or until custard is set. When cool, spread a thick layer of jelly or jam over the top. Beat the egg whites until stiff, add the sugar gradually and beat until stiff. Spread this meringue on top of the jam and place in the oven until a delicate brown. Serve hot or cold with cream.

The Alleged Great Aunt

By Henry Kitchell Webster, Janet Ayer Fairbank and Margaret Ayer Barnes

When Gilbert Meade dies and Lily De Long, one-time operatic star, claims $100,000 as dower rights as his widow, the Meade family settles to avoid scandal. Young Gilbert, grand-nephew of the deceased man, decides to investigate under guise of writing Miss De Long's biography. He stays at her home and is convinced immediately that she is innocent but that her lawyer, Charles Bradley, is perpetrating a fraud, of which his brother, Charles, a banker, has some knowledge. Gilbert is additionally convinced that there is mystery afoot because a girl he met on a bus, who admitted to him that she had just taken a job under an assumed name, is in Miss De Long's household as her companion.

IT SEEMED to Gilbert, when he got a good look at Bradley's face under the light, that the panic he had displayed earlier had settled into a sort of controlled desperation. Whatever the misdeeds of the absent Charles Bradley might be, this very respectable banker brother of his must have something ruinous on his own conscience.

His preoccupation gave an odd turn to the bridge game. Lily, saying casually that she knew him of old as an admirable bridge player, promptly selected him for a partner, in obvious expectation of winning some odd change from her guests, but he failed her. They went down disastrously before she could change to Jane, who proved to be the expert of the four. Lily's spirits rebounded when she began winning, and they might have played late if a casual remark she made to Bradley during the dealing of a hand hadn't finished him off.

"Mr. Meade has come down here," she told him, "to write my biography."

So Bradley Left.

Bradley made no effort to pick up his cards, and after a moment said feebly that he had a bad headache coming on and thought he'd better go home.

Soon after his departure the others, too, said good night.

Back in the study Gilbert found that Alberto had made up the cot and left the big bow window open to the spring night. He was tired and went to bed prepared to fall instantly to sleep. He did not quite accomplish this, however, because the room was flooded by light from a village street lamp on the square. For some time he lay awake, turning over in his mind the mysteries of this household which he had so impetuously joined.

But soon he was getting sleepy. Alberto had been wrong. The cot was comfortable. His eyes closed, opened once more to the swaying shadows of tree branches in his ceiling, closed again, and in a moment he was asleep.

Sense of Panic.

When he awakened it was out of a very deep slumber and with a lost sensation so intense that it amounted almost to a nightmare. He realized that it was pitch dark. Where were the patterns on the ceiling thrown by the street lamp through the limbs of the elm tree? Where was the bow window? And what had awakened him with that sudden sense of panic? He sat up smartly in bed.

There was a sharp, light click. Some one had closed the door! Was he entering or was he leaving the room?

Galvanized into action, Gilbert turned on the light that hung over his bed. He glared about him. He was alone and the door was shut. The room looked different, however, and for a bewildered instant he could not say why. Then he realized that the dark velvet curtains were drawn over the open windows. They hung in heavy folds through which no ray of light could have penetrated. Some one had drawn them while he slept.

Desk Was Unlocked.

He turned to the chair on which his clothes were lying to see if he had been robbed. Everything was in place—money, pocketbook and watch. The time was a quarter to 2. He threw another glance about his room, then paused transfixed. The big desk, which he had been unable to open the night before, was not locked now nor even completely shut, for the corner of a scratch pad had got in the way of the lid and prevented it closing.

Some one had been in his room, then, and for some more sinister purpose than the drawing of window curtains. As he walked toward the safe to see if it had been molested, his eye was caught by a square of white paper on the floor, which had evidently fallen from the interior of the desk. He picked it up; it was only—of all things—an old-fashioned cabinet photograph of a woman. He barely glanced at it as he slipped it mechanically into the pocket of his dressing gown, and, hurrying to the safe, pulled at its knob and found it secure.

Where Was Intruder?

This did not prove that it had not been tampered with, but that would have to wait. Where had the intruder gone on leaving his room?

He had an abrupt realization of his obligation as the masculine protector of the two women in the house—especially of old Lily De Long, who was sleeping on the first floor. He glanced about for a weapon and his eye fell upon a substantial poker beside the fireplace. It felt heartenlingly heavy in his hand. Walking noiselessly on his bare feet he crossed the room, turned out the light over his head and flung his door wide open.

Beyond it was blackness. Gilbert advanced, all his senses alert. At the juncture of the corridor and hall his groping hand touched the cold metal plate of an electric light switch. He pressed the button and the reassuring radiance from the central chandelier illuminated an empty hall. He walked to Lily's door and turned the knob. It was locked, and from within came the sound of regular, heavy breathing. Gilbert heard himself gasp with relief.

Household Awakened.

He was turning from her threshold when he heard the sound of a muted footstep on the upper corridor. "Who's there?" he demanded, as simultaneously, Jane's voice asked the same question.

Gilbert went to the foot of the stairs. The girl was leaning over the bannisters.

"Are you all right?" he questioned.

"Yes, of course. Are you?" Her voice seemed faintly ironic.

It was queer, Jane's turning up like that. He was sure he had walked too lightly to awaken her.

"I think there may be a burglar in the house," Gilbert told her. "Have you heard anything? Could anyone be upstairs?"

"No. I haven't been asleep. I would have heard."

"What were you doing at Miss De Long's door?" The words came coolly down the staircase. "Looking for the burglar?"

"Of course. Where the devil can he have gone?"

"Are the doors both fastened? Miss De Long made me lock them, the front one and the one in the corridor."

For the first time Gilbert realized that a cold draught was blowing along the floor and swirling about his bare ankles. "I'll see."

The massive front door was locked, but when he went around to the side door, he found it was not even latched. He pulled it to, locked it, then returned to tell Jane.

"Well, I think I'll go back to bed," she said, not at all perturbed. "Pleasant dreams!"

Strange that thought of a burglar should not seem to disturb her, Gilbert reflected, as he snapped off the lights and returned to his room. And wasn't it odd that she'd be walking about the house after she had gone to bed? And it was she who had suggested that the burglar could have gone out the side door.

Was Jane the Culprit?

He lay in bed for some time in the close dark, trying to revise his impressions. Had he been too precipitate in assuming that Jane's presence in this house had nothing sinister about it? Had he let this girl make a fool of him, merely because she was pretty? He set his jaw grimly. There was nothing at all pretty in framing something on a helpless old woman like Lily De Long! He might just as well admit the truth: The burglar might have been Jane.

It took Gilbert so long to go to sleep that he did not awaken until late on the following morning. It was 11 o'clock when he emerged from his room, wondering how breakfast might be procured.

Lily's doors were still closed, and there was no one about on the lower floor. He looked into the pantry, but there was no sign of Alberto. On emerging, he caught the sound of voices, and followed them to a closed-in porch at the back of the house, overlooking the garden.

Stranger Present.

As he approached, he identified one of the speakers as Jane, and he came out on the gallery to find a strange man sitting there talking to her. She looked very blooming and jolly, like any nice girl who was having a good time, and not in the least like a possible burglar.

"Good morning," she said. Then with a gesture toward her companion, "This is Mr. Charles Bradley, Mr. Meade."

The stranger got politely to his feet, and shook hands with Gilbert. He was a good-looking man, in the late forties, this up-State lawyer who had settled Lily's claim for her. He did not resemble his shrunken banker brother. There was, Gilbert decided with some disappointment, nothing wrong about this Bradley, except possibly a tendency to foppishness. But what was he doing in Stanwix Falls, when Lily had been so definite about his being elsewhere?

"I understand you had a scare last night?" Bradley said.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

Peritonitis.

INTEREST in peritonitis is great, since so many have friends and acquaintances who have suffered from this condition. It is often associated in the lay mind with abdominal operations.

We must first understand that the peritoneum is a thin, secreting and absorbing membrane of great importance to the proper functioning of the structures and organs that lie within the abdominal cavity. It lines the abdominal cavity, covers the numerous folds of the intestinal tube, and equals in total area the skin of the entire body.

It has great absorptive powers. Substances such as bacteria and their toxins that come into contact with the peritoneum are sent with great rapidity into the blood stream or into the lymph channels.

If the peritoneum becomes infected by bacteria the patient is definitely engaged in a fight for life. For example, if the removal of a diseased appendix has been delayed so that rupture occurs, pus and bacteria from the intestine may be poured into the peritoneal cavity.

Fortunately, the peritoneum possesses considerable fighting power. Whenever it is irritated by bacteria it pours out fluid containing cells and fibrin that inhibits the growth of bacteria. This fluid also helps to limit or wall off the infection, and may glue together loops of the intestine in an effort to stop its spread. Sometimes the bacterial invasion is so virulent that the defensive processes are inadequate to cope with the situation, and the condition known as general peritonitis results. This means that a considerable portion of the membrane is involved and that life is in danger.

Early manifestations are usually those of pain, tenderness, rigidity of the abdominal muscles, and other evidences that the patient is severely ill. Vomiting usually occurs.

The treatment of peritonitis is directed toward limiting the spread of the infection and sustaining the strength of the patient. It is often wise to place the patient in a semi-sitting posture in order to secure the advantage of gravity drainage. The body defenses must be reinforced by every means at the physicians' command. The normal fluids require maintenance, and pain should be eliminated in so far as possible. Clean and prompt surgery when the indication is clear has greatly reduced the number of cases of peritonitis, and the use of glucose solutions, normal salt solutions, and other supportive measures has saved many lives.

New Yorkers Live Longer.

Lives are becoming longer. The proportion of New York's population over 45 years old has increased by more than a third in the last 35 years, the most rapid increase recorded in any similar period.

"The Barretts of Wimpole Street" Leads List of the Ten Best Films of 1934

Consensus Puts Honor Sign on Screen Leaders

Annual Vote of Critics Is Largest on Record Up to Date; Theater Notes.

Reprinted From Yesterday's Last Edition.

By Nelson B. Bell.

So the "Ten best pictures of the year," released between November 1, 1933, and October 31, 1934, were these:

1. THE BARRETTS OF WIMPOLE STREET.
2. THE HOUSE OF ROTHSCHILD.
3. IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT.
4. ONE NIGHT OF LOVE.
5. LITTLE WOMEN.
6. THE THIN MAN.
7. VIVA, VILLA!
8. DINNER AT EIGHT.
9. THE COUNT OF MONTE CRISTO.
10. BERKELEY SQUARE.

This is the consensus of opinion as evidenced by the vote of 424 critics—the largest number ever recorded in one of these annual guessing bees, conducted by the Film Daily, as personified by Mr. Jack Alicoate, a former member of the staff of this estimable family journal—representing every important residential community in these United States of America and, I dare say, portions of Canada and Mexico.

"The Barretts of Wimpole Street," rated first among the season's releases, amassed a grand total of 348 votes, the largest ever accorded a winning picture in all the 13 annual Nation-wide polls conducted under the same auspices.

It is a significant fact, I think, that out of the approximately 500 films eligible for consideration in this vote, 173 were nominated as worthy of being considered as among the "ten best." That is to say that one or more critics throughout the land deemed 173 films worthy of being rated among the season's winners.

We take the liberty at this point of quoting from the Film Daily's comments on its own poll:

Brick Bats and Bouquets.

Evidence of the keen judgment that has been developed by film reviewers and editors in the selection of worthy pictures was demonstrated by the large number of votes piled up by the leading pictures in the "Ten Best" group. For the first time in the history of the poll, two films received the vote of more than 300 critics, the second being "The House of Rothschild." Number of pictures receiving more than 200 votes also exceeded all previous years, with "It Happened One Night," "One Night of Love," "Little Women" and "The Thin Man" all getting between 231 and 261.

The chief complaint of the critics in selecting the year's best pictures was their difficulty in limiting the list to ten. Dozens of film scribes insisted that several other films were entitled to "Ten Best" rating and some of the critics added supplemental lists, which of course could not be considered in the official vote.

Proving that the memory of the critics is quite good, "Little Women" and "Berkeley Square," which were released at the end of 1933, but not in time to get into the 1933 "Ten Best" ballot, managed to make the 1934 winning list, with "Little Women" getting a very substantial vote although "Berkeley Square" was nearly nosed out by "Gay Divorcee."

This was tough luck for the highly enjoyable "Gay Divorcee," but an even more lamentable fate befell "Judge Priest," which appeared to be a certain bet for "Ten Best" honors, but lost out apparently through a division of votes with the other Will Rogers' picture, "David Harum."

There were, as already stated, 173 pictures deemed by some critic or other worthy of inclusion in the list of the year's "ten best"—or, as I always say it should be, the "best ten." Beyond that there was a list of 42—to all intents and purposes the same as last year—comprising an "honor roll," not quite making the top ranking.

Foreign pictures had no representation in the choices of the "ten best" and only one, "Catherine the Great," starring Elizabeth Bergner, managed to crash the "honor list."

Details and Lowdown.

For those who are interested in such detailed credits, authors, directors and principal players concerned in the 1934 winners are:

The Post's Selections.

Now, as to our own modest participation in this annual gamble, we can only go back and reprint the choice set forth many weeks ago as our nominations for the national honor the Film Daily annually bestows, which were these:

1. LITTLE WOMEN.
2. THE BARRETTS OF WIMPOLE STREET.
3. THE HOUSE OF ROTHSCHILD.
4. DINNER AT EIGHT.
5. IT HAPPENED ONE NIGHT.
6. ONE NIGHT OF LOVE.
7. JUDGE PRIEST.
8. THE THIN MAN.
9. VIVA VILLA!
10. WHAT EVERY WOMAN KNOWS.

The two pictures which we failed to place—"Judge Priest" and "What Every Woman Knows"—both managed to make the "Honor Roll," the first in twelfth place, the second in twenty-third.

The two ranking pictures that supplanted these in national favor, I happen never to have seen—not to say that I should have voted for them had I been so fortunate as to have viewed them.

The circumstances that prevented my seeing "Berkeley Square" I do not recall. "The Count of Monte Cristo" was first presented at KRO-Keith's Theater during the period that my helpful associate, Mr. Gerald G. Gross, was occupying this bench and I was stretched out under a blistering sun on a sandy beach contiguous to one of our better known oceans last September.

So with a feeble batting average of .800 we leave you to make what you can of the mass opinion of a quota of earnest souls who go down to their seats on slips to gaze unendingly at shadows on a sheet. It's a good list, at that.

Bulletin: George Bushar and John Tuerk announce the last two weeks of Sean "O'Casey's drama, "Within the Gates," which has been running at the National Theater in New York for the past four months. The final New York performance will be placed on January 12. Due to the extraordinary out-of-town interest displayed in the O'Casey drama, the New York company, headed by Lillian Gish, Bramwell Fletcher, Moffatt Johnsen and Mary Morris, will be retained for a speedy tour which will open in the Chestnut Street Opera House in Philadelphia on Monday, January 14, where the engagement will be limited to one week. A subsequent week in Boston will be followed by limited engagements in Providence, Hartford, Springfield, New Haven, Washington, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit, Toronto and Chicago. How do you mean, "speedy tour?"

Tournament Registrations.

And this from Bess Davis Schreiner, without whose energetic promotions the Capital's amateur drama would be in a sorry way

All drama groups in the District of Columbia are asked to note that the period of registration for the 1935 One-act Play Tournament of the District of Columbia closes Saturday, January 5, and all entries must be in the office of the Community Center Department not later than Monday morning, January 7, at 9 a. m.

The first 20 groups registering will be accepted for this year's preliminaries, which will open at Roosevelt Auditorium, Tuesday, February 5, with preliminary performances also on February 7, 9, 12 and 14. The finals will be held Saturday night, February 16, also at Roosevelt Auditorium, when the four outstanding plays will be repeated for the rating by the city's five leading drama critics.

The tournament is open to any adult dramatic club in Washington which has been recognized as an organization by public performances within the past year. Full information regarding tournament rules may be had at the Community Center Department, Franklin Administration Building, Thirteenth and K streets.

So What?

This is the annual tournament that lashes us into a nervous frenzy every year because the Capital's resident talents are not turned to some permanent, municipal account.

These one-act play tournaments, after a round decade, are exactly where they started—innumerable groups of local amateurs are still enacting their plays to negligible returns, without proper stage facilities and with no accretion of artistry, income, definite goal or tangible assets.

As has been stated here so many times that it is getting a bit irksome to me as well as to you, there are the makings of a real community playhouse—Little Theater, if you like—in the sporadic amateur activities that now are floundering around in search of terminal facilities. The only things that stand in the way of the establishment of a real Community Theater under amateur auspices in Washington are the silly jealousies, false pride and costly rivalries of the individual groups that might so easily put the National Capital on the map as a productional center of importance rather than as a mere battleground of artistic impotence.

If you would care for a glance ahead in the so-called legitimate theater, it may be of interest that while the week of January 14 is open at the National, the week of the 21st bids fair to bring Tallulah Bankhead to the local stage in the stellar role of "Rain," the play indelibly associated in the theater-going mind with the late Jeanne Eagels. This will be an event, if rumors of political preferment in the Bankhead clan come true. Then on January 28 will come Cornelia Otis Skinner in her remarkable character studies, and on February 3, Walter Huston, Fay Bainter and Ann Sunderland in Sinclair Lewis' "Dodsworth." And there you have it.

Every-Man-for-Himself Note.

So what are your ten best, if any?

On Local Screens Tomorrow

In Gene Fowler's alleged biography of Phineas T. Barnum, filmed under the title of "The Mighty Barnum" and opening on the screen at Loew's Fox Theater tomorrow, Adolphe Menjou, pictured above at left, is importantly cast as a character who turns out to be the Bailey of the Barnum & Bailey partnership. It is a colorful role, which Mr. Menjou plays right down to the ground, in a manner of speaking. Above at right is Myrna Loy, who appears opposite Warner Baxter in "Broadway Bill," one of Frank Capra's most notable productions for Columbia, also opening tomorrow, but on the screen at Warners' Earle.

Hollywood

By Sidney Skolsky

Hollywood, Jan. 2

CHARLES BUTTERWORTH sits on the set of "Forsaking All Others" watching Clark Gable and Joan Crawford play a scene. Butterworth sits there interested, looking more like a tourist than an actor in the flicker.

Director Van Dyke calls him. Charles is in this sequence. He gets up from his chair and walks onto the set. The scene being filmed is the one you see on the screen in which Gable and Butterworth visit Miss Crawford in the log cabin and sit down to eat Mulligan stew.

He plays his role and recites his lines without error. He explains that it is one of the few roles he has had recently in which he was given his part, all written, before he faced the camera.

He is generally rushed into a flicker to supply some needed comedy. He usually can be seen on a set talking to another performer or a director. The conversation means that Butterworth is writing a comedy scene. He doesn't object to writing many of his lines, he likes doing this, but he does like some time to work on a script at home.

He is an amusing performer to watch at work. His comedy registers while performing on the set as well as on the screen. He often has Gable and Director Van Dyke laughing, causing the scene to be shot again.

He uses little or no make-up. His face looks practically the same as it appears on the screen. He's generally ready to go on. In fact, one can never really tell what effect many glasses of liquor have on him. He looked that way before he tilted a glass.

He is one of the few flicker actors with a college diploma. He is a graduate of Notre Dame.

While in college, he also worked as a reporter on the South Bend News-Times. When he was graduated, he had a diploma entitling him to become a lawyer so he immediately went into vaudeville, doing a single act. He played on the Gus Sun Time, either opening a bill or closing it. He was generally on before the audience was in the theater or after the audience left.

He did his usual style "monologue" and he was a flop, especially when an audience did see him. Unable to get further vaudeville bookings, he worked as a newspaper man on the Mount Vernon Argus and the New York Times. One of the things he wrote while in this job was a letter to J. P McEvoy. He asked for a combination job of secretary and gag man. McEvoy then was writing the first edition of the "Americana" revue.

It was at a rehearsal that Butterworth, the secretary, recited one of his vaudeville monologues. Now he had an audience—a Richard Herndon, the producer. Charlie was hired for the show. He now had his third job—and his start on Broadway.

He now likes Hollywood and has a large house with a tennis court. He is fond of tennis and swimming, and is really a good tennis player. He has to have a large house, for it is practically a clubroom for his friends.

He is a good eater and will eat anything which is placed before him. However, if you don't object, he'd like to do his own ordering. He especially favors cereals, fruit, eggs and coffee. Therefore, he generally eats two or three breakfasts a day.

He reads a great deal and prefers biographies. In the manner of current fiction, his favorite novelist is Ernest Hemingway. If he deserted acting, he'd like to write . . . "I'd like to write," said Butterworth. "Letters, I mean. Especially the kind with the personal touch, beginning: 'If you can send me $10 within a couple of days.'"

He is noted almost as much as Ed Wynn and Joe Cook for freak inventions. His best, he believes, is for a fellow who has plenty of hair. He has invented a toupee which will make the fellow look bald.

He likes to drive a car, but he prefers to have a chauffeur sitting next to him while driving. This is why he employs a chauffeur.

He sleeps in pajamas, wearing both the trousers and the jacket. He is a quiet sleeper and does nothing to disturb himself. His bedroom has twin beds. The other bed is occupied by Ethel—who is the wife.

His ambition is to be able to guess his weight on a penny weighing machine and he claims he'll be able to do it yet if the scales will give him some help.

He likes to go to the movies and his favorite picture is "Custer's Last Stand." "It used to be on our dining room wall," says Charlie, "but we managed to give it away." He is one of the few actors in the cinema town who is not his own favorite screen actor. He likes Charlie Chaplin a little better than he likes himself.

Postlude

Reprinted From Yesterday's Last Edition.

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Eide Norena, soprano, and Beveridge Webster, pianist, in joint recital Wednesday morning in the Mayflower Hotel ball room. Program: songs by Handel, Donaudy, Mozart, Faure, Liszt, Debussy, Schubert and Grieg; piano pieces by Mendelssohn, Chopin, Brahms, Weber, Debussy and Ravel.

Light in timbre and limited in color range, the voice of Eide Norena has plasticity and a silvery sheen which were displayed to admirable advantage in the florature passages of Handel's "Care selve," Donaudy's "Spirate pur" and a Mozartian area from "Die Entfuerung aus dem Serail." Therein the tenuous delicacy of the vocal line exerted a singular charm, as of an almost disembodied tone moving in cool arabesques.

This ethereal quality was put to apt use also in the lyrics, which had been for the most part well chosen to emphasize that very virtue. The airy and weightless tone conformed delightfully to the mood of Faure's lovely "Clair de lune" and his "Recontre," fitted itself deftly to the "Quand je dors" of Liszt, and was wistfully appealing in Schubert's "Du bist die Ruh'" and "Wohin," and in the two Grieg selections, "Det forste Mote" and "Hytten."

But in the whimsical "Fantoches" of Debussy, the limitations of volume and color resulted in an ineffective reading. As long as the singer confines herself to unforced and smoothly flowing tone, the ear is pleased by its argentine clarity. Any excess of pressure on the vocal chords, however, particularly in sustained tones, betrays a latent tendency to hover on the edge of the pitch, and the high notes are almost invariably covered.

Of Beveridge Webster one has heard many eulogistic reports since his return to his native land this season. Undoubtedly, this young American has a sterling pianistic talent: that much was obvious in its partial disclosure on this occasion, but its full potentialities were left in abeyance by the character of his selections.

Virtuosity Revealed.

The salon brilliance of Mendelssohn's Rondo Capriccioso, the fourth Etude of Chopin, the Weber Rondo, Debussy's Poissons d'Or and Ravel's Alborada del Grazioso revealed Mr. Webster's technical skill and surety, the crispness of his passage work, and the dexterous speed of which he is capable. On the basis of these pieces alone, one would adjudge him a detached and accurate player with the physical equipment, but not the temperament, of a virtuoso.

Yet in his readings of the Berceuse and the B flat minor Scherzo of Chopin and an Intermezzo by Brahms there were evidences of interpretative impulse. Here he seemed more concerned with tonal quality and with the poesy that underlies mere notes. These glimpses of an intuitive musicianship were tantalizing rather than satisfactory, for one felt that a great deal of eloquence was being restrained.

While his playing yesterday was predominantly objective and scintillant, stressing his notable ability as a technician, one surmises the presence in him of strong subjective potentialities. He can be lyrically persuasive when he wishes, and his control of dynamics includes a fine singing tone which he uses too sparingly and without an exact coordination of pedaling. There is in his playing so much reward for the listener that one would like to hear him in a program which would reveal more of the individuality behind the brilliant executant.

Hagerstown's Business Best In Four Years

Employment, Building and Marriage Barometers Rise in 1934.

Hagerstown, Md., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Surveys and statistics revealed that 1934 was the most prosperous here since 1930.

A report made by Brewer L. Stouffer, manager of the local re-employment office, shows that since the office was opened October 16, 1933, 2,681 persons had been obtained either full-time or part-time jobs. A recent survey made by Mr. Stouffer revealed a marked improvement in business conditions, with even a scarcity of some types of labor, including expert stonecutters.

The annual report of Samuel Greenawalt, city engineer, shows building permits issued during 1934 were for a value of $507,313, against $72,475 the previous year.

The figure last year was boosted by reason of a new hospital, which is now under construction, the cost of which is $358,000. This project will be completed next summer.

Residential property, which included the erection of 12 new homes, was on a par with the previous year.

New construction in 1934 was valued at $457,218, while alterations and additions cost $49,995.

In 1930 property valued at $571,787 was constructed, of which $232,470 was for residences and $222,859 was for schools and churches. In 1931 there was $245,550 and in 1932 $97,053.

Marriages at this Gretna Green, also considered by court clerks as a business barometer, showed an increase in 1934. There were 2,213 licenses issued, against 2,010 in 1933; 1,907 in 1932, 2,021 in 1931 and 2,251 in 1929. June, 1934, led all previous months in licenses issued, there being 259.

There were also 2,031 deeds and mortgages recorded here in 1934, as compared with 1,544 in 1933, 1,931 in 1932 and 2,473 in 1929. There were fewer divorces in 1934, 112 suits having been filed.

The Federal Diary

(Trade-Mark Applied For.)

By Morgan Baker.

A UNITED front is formed by the National Federation of Federal Employes and the National Legislative Council of Federal Employe Organizations, claiming a substantial majority of all organized Government workers, in pressing for immediate enactment a constructive Federal personnel program.

BAKER.

The program is hailed as a benefit for the taxpayers as well as employes.

"Congress may be certain that the program as a whole has been worked out carefully and thoughtfully and is worthy of equal support on the part of the legislators," an NFFE spokesman said last night.

"Merit system, pay restoration, leave, hours, retirement, court of appeals—these and other issues of the highest importance both to employes and to the well-being of the service as a whole are being placed before this session and pushed aggressively by the national officers."

W. E. Hoffheins, War, president of the All States Officers Society, announces the society's business meeting and dinner has been postponed from Monday night to the latter part of January.

Mailing Liquors Still Punishable By Fine of $1,000

Repeal of the eighteenth amendment had no affect whatever on the postal laws forbidding the mailing of all liquors, the Postoffice Department yesterday pointed out.

Since repeal, many people have assumed they could mail liquor, it was explained, but regulations are still in effect making it an offense punishable by $1,000 fine, two years imprisonment, or both.

PLANS for the Government's adoption of a policy of appointing retired Army and Navy officers to posts of high responsibility in the civilian branch meets with vigorous opposition of the National Federation of Federal Employes.

In connection with the upbuilding of a Federal personnel system based on merit and efficiency, as opposed to that method which looks upon governmental positions solely as patronage plums, Luther S. Steward, N. F. F. E. president, calls to our attention that it has been suggested that, upon their retirement, officers of the Army and Navy be appointed to posts of responsibility in some civilian branch.

"Without questioning the loyalty, patriotism or the capacity of these men," Mr. Steward declares, "it can be said that such a proposal definitely lacks merit, and especially so where it is offered as a solution, as it so often is, of the Federal personnel problem.

"Because, after all, it is no answer to that question, admittedly one of the most pressing before the country today. Army officers and Navy officers are trained for specific duties. When they have fulfilled them faithfully and have retired, it would be unfair to them, and unfair to the civilian service to place them in positions of responsibility which, with all due respect to their education and intelligence, they would not be fitted to fill with highest efficiency."

Naval Gun Practice Begun Off West Coast

San Pedro, Calif., Jan. 3 (AP).—The roar of big guns at sea off the California coast marks the beginning tonight of the year's test to see whether Uncle Sam's gunners are what the fleet officers believe them to be—the best naval marksmen in the world.

The fastest fighting craft of the United States Fleet, the squadron of heavy cruisers under command of Vice Admiral Harris Laning, opened up with their 8-inch main batteries to initiate the first phase of the 1935 gunnery operations.

Parrish in Jail, Insists He Shot In Self-Defense

Returns Voluntarily From New York, Gives Up to Burke.

Quietly entering Detective Headquarters yesterday, Henry B. Parrish, 45, wanted for questioning here since Tuesday in connection with the shooting of John M. Mears, 30, a Government clerk, surrendered to Inspector F. S. W. Burke.

"I want to see Chief of Detectives Burke," Parrish told the lieutenant on duty when he entered. He was ushered into Inspector Burke's office, where he blinked at the officer studiously from behind spectacles and ran one hand through his thinning hair.

"I'm Inspector Burke," replied Burke.

"Glad to meet you. I've heard a lot about you," said Parrish, offering his hand. Burke accepted it.

Parrish told his story, then was charged with assault with intent to kill and taken to jail.

The shooting, which occurred in a rooming house run by Parrish in the 800 block of Nineteenth street northwest, was one of self-defense, Parrish said.

He and Mrs. Myrtle Doolittle, manager of the rooming house returned from Raleigh, N. C., where they had been spending the holidays, he said. They found Mears, who previously had been asked to move, asleep outside Mrs. Doolittle's room on a cot. When Mears was aroused, Parrish said, he became violent, so Parrish shot him.

Parrish said he fled to New York, where he wandered about the streets. Then he decided to return to Washington and face the music.

At Emergency Hospital, where Mears was taken with a .32-caliber bullet in his body, physicians said last night his condition was improved and his chances for recovery were excellent.

Jones Flays 'Confession' As Frame-up

Officers Threatened to Give Him to Mob, Says Prisoner.

Wife Backs Charge at Trial for Murder of Two Girls.

Fincastle, Va., Jan. 3 (AP).—Philip Jones, Negro, on trial for his life told Judge Benjamin Haden today that any confession he may have made to the murder of two Clifton Forge girls and an attempted criminal attack on one of them was made because officers threatened to turn him over to an angry mob unless he confessed.

"I don't remember making any statement or confession," he said, "and if I did I was so scared I didn't know what I was saying."

His wife, indicted for the same capital crimes, reiterated his assertions, charging that officers threatened to kill her in "Slaughter Pen Hollow" if she didn't say that her husband battered in the heads of the two girls.

Accuses Prosecutor.

"Who told you that?" asked Commonwealth's Attorney M. J. Putnam, of Clifton Forge.

"You was one of 'em," replied the wife of the defendant, who was rushed here late today when the prosecution attempted to put into the record Jones' alleged confession.

At 5 o'clock Judge Benjamin Haden adjourned court, postponing until tomorrow his ruling on the admissibility of the purported confessions.

The accusations were made while the jury was out of the courtroom.

The commonwealth had asserted its alleged confession was made voluntarily and without duress by Jones while he was confined in the Henrico Jail, where he and three other Negroes arrested for the murders were brought for safe keeping.

Jury Is Absent.

The admissibility of the purported confession was argued in the absence of the jury.

The prosecution, although not ready to rest with the alleged confession, had charted its course to the confession climax, buildind up a mass of testimony in corroboration of the statements in the document.

A tense moment in the trial, which was moved from Covington to Fincastle after reported threats of violence by citizens aroused by the crime, came earlier when Mayor Frank Wheeler, of Clifton Forge, showed anger at the cross-questioning of Defense Attorney T. Warren Messick.

Wheeler had told of searching for the missing girls, of finding blood in Jones' house, of finding Jones in the hospital with a gunshot wound in his leg, of arresting Jones, his wife and two other Negroes, of finding the "lacerated" body of Alice and the battered body of the younger sister, Ellen.

Witness Reluctant.

On cross-examination, Messick tried to bring from the mayor the identity of the white man he named in the opening speech as the murderer of the girls.

"Do you know a man by that name?" Messick asked the mayor.

"I know about 20 by that name," Wheeler replied.

Walking over to the witness stand, a diagram in his hand, Messick asked the mayor to stand up and tell the jury who lived at the designated place on the diagram.

Wheeler objected to looking at it.

"Will you explain this to the jury?" Messick asked.

"You explain it," Wheeler shouted. "I won't be a party to——"

Here Judge Haden, eager to keep the jury from hearing any statement which might make a mistrial, called a recess.

After the recess, Wheeler was asked several inconsequential questions, and then was permitted to leave the stand.

Maryland May Purchase St. Clement's Island

Leonardtown, Md., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Mrs. J. Frank Parran, president of the Society of Colonial Dames of Southern Maryland, will ask the Maryland legislature to pass a bill to buy back from the United States Government St. Clements Island, first landing place of the Maryland colonists, which lies in the Potomac River off Kopels Point, St. Marys County.

This island, now known as Blackistone Island, is used in connection with the Government proving grounds at Dalgren, Va. The State of Maryland has already erected a 40-foot granite cross in commemoration of the first landing of the settlers on the island, and it is the purpose to make it a State shrine.

Convict Dupes Prison Guards, Makes Escape

James Sudler, 26, Larceny Inmate, Walks From Maryland Prison.

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 3 (AP).—James Sudler, 26, who was serving a three-year sentence for larceny, escaped late today from the Maryland Penitentiary.

Sudler has served about six months of his sentence. Penitentiary authorities offered a reward of $50 for his recapture.

Sudler was one of four convicts who were painting an iron fence outside the prison wall. Several guards were in charge of the group.

Sudler said he had to go inside the prison for a minute and was permitted to walk around a corner to the main entrance. The guards watched him.

He had been an orderly prisoner and it was expected that he would go into the prison, the guards said. But he did not enter the structure. Prison officials believed he kept on walking after turning the corner.

When he did not return in ten minutes a search was made for him.

Peery Says Virginia Wants U.S. Projects

Willing to Adopt Needed Laws, Roosevelt Told.

Richmond, Va., Jan. 3 (AP).—Gov. Peery has informed President Roosevelt of his desire that Virginia municipalities benefit fully from any new Federal relief program, and says that if it appears that additional legislation is needed to accomplish this, the attorney general or a member of his staff will be sent to Washington for conference with the legal division of the Public Works Administration.

Answering a letter from the President which mentioned slum clearance projects, nonprofit corporations to bring about rural electrification and the validifying of bonds and other obligations issued by municipalities for public works projects and sold to the Federal Government, the Governor said it is possible provisions of Virginia laws are not broad enough to permit cities to undertake better housing projects with Federal cooperation.

Admiral Grayson, an alumnus of the College of William and Mary as well as of the Medical College of Virginia and other medical schools, was personal physician to President Woodrow Wilson.

NEW BERN, N. C.—George Isaac Hughes, Civil War veteran, celebrated his ninety-fifth birthday Wednesday as the father of an 11-day-old son by his second wife, who is just 27.

Being an admirer of the President, he has named the new child Franklin Roosevelt Hughes.

Hughes is New Bern's only surviving Confederate veteran. His grandmother, Katie Tillman, lived to be 110 years old, but Hughes hopes to surpass this record. His friends, judging from his present health, claim he may do so. Born in 1840, he says his ripe old age may be attributed to plenty of work, lack of worry and absence of dissipation.

Married ten minutes after 1935 had come into existence, Raymond Reece, Alexandria, and Mildred Johnson, Washintgon, claim to be the first newlyweds of the new year in Luray, where they were married. Although the license was taken out just 25 minutes prior to the marriage the two proceedings occurred in different years.

While demolishing the high school at Pocomoke City, Md., workmen found a collection of coins, historical papers and documents in the corner stone. Copies of newspapers, records of old business houses of the city, as well as a list of those contributing toward the expense of erecting the building have recalled many events long forgotten by the town's old-timers.

Last fall Leonardtown (Md.) put its Sherlock Holmes to work on the mysterious disappearance of thousands of gallons of water from the town tank each day. Now, Winchester is having the same trouble. Lee Grant, superintendent of the waterworks, has been assigned the task of finding a 722,000-gallon leak which is handicapping the water system.

Winchester has one of the oldest water systems in the United States. It is believed many of the mains have outlived their usefulness and become worn through in sections.

Old hermits who live in caves are seldom found outside the pages of fiction, but Wayne County, W. Va., boasts a spry solitary dweller, 83 years old. His name is Harry Doyles and he actually lives in a cave. Last winter he cleared three acres of "new" ground around his cave, raised 50 bushels of corn and grew enough other vegetables to feed himself. A crude bed, homemade stove and a shelf, serving as a table, make up the furnishings of his natural dwelling.

Washington and Lee University law students who return from their Christmas holidays tomorrow will find a full working library at their disposal in the old Y. M. C. A. room in Reid Hall, according to Dean W. H. Moreland. The new reading hall will replace the old law library which was destroyed by fire.

Minister Leads As Agents Raid Maryland Still

The Rev. Mr. Ritgely Again Proves Nemesis of Bootleggers.

Myersville, Md., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—For the second time within a little more than two months the Rev. Robert J. Ritgely, Myersville minister of the Church of the Brethren, laid aside his ministerial garb last night and led Federal Agents Tagg and Lemon, of Hagerstown to the site of an illicit still in the mountains near Wolfesville 6 miles north of here.

Three men, the small still, which had ceased operation only a few hours previously, and 225 gallons of mash and other equipment were seized. Parker Wolfe and two men whose names could not be learned will be given a hearing before United States Commissioner D. Angell Wolfinger, Hagerstown, tomorrow on charges of illegally manufacturing liquor.

The plant, according to the agents, was well hidden in the heart of the mountains. It is said the Rev. Mr. Ritgely received information yesterday that the plant was in operation and rode about 10 miles on horseback to investigate the matter personally before notifying Federal agents.

Last October the minister personally led Federal agents on a raid west of Myersville which resulted in the confiscation of a still and large quantity of mash.

Confederate Veterans Gt Norfolk Invitation

Norfolk, Va., Jan. 3 (AP).—Norfolk today invited the United Confederate Veterans to hold their annual reunion there this year. The invitation, sent to Adjt. Gen. Harry Rene Lee, at Nashville, said it was hoped they could be quartered during the convention at the Naval Base, within sight of the scene of the famous battle of the Merrimac and the Monitor, the first engagement between ironclad ships of war.

The invitation was extended after it was learned that St. Petersburg, Fla., had been compelled to withdraw its invitation for the meeting. Norfolk's offer is contingent upon a conference with officials of veterans as to details.

Fire Destroys Shop On Senator's Estate

Seaford, Del., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—The large frame workshop on the apple orchard farm of United States Senator John G. Townsend, jr., near here was destroyed by fire today, together with equipment.

William Truitt, 30, employed in the workshop, was seriously burned about the face and hands when he entered the burning building to save some tools. The loss is estimated at $6,000, partly covered by insurance. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Sheriff Seizes Slot Machines In Four Raids

Frederick County Begins Concerted Drive on Illegal Devices.

Frederick, Md., Jan. 3 (AP).—Sheriff Roy Hitler and two deputies, in an effort to check the operation of illegal slot machines in Frederick County, today raided four places, confiscating seven machines.

The raids were made on warrants secured by the sheriff. Dates for the hearings of persons listed as proprietors of the places will be set later, the sheriff said.

Three machines were seized at the beer parlor of Raymond W. Seachrist; one machine at the barber shop of N. Marsden and two machines at the place of Charles E. Cole, jr., all in Frederick.

These raids were made by the sheriff with Deputies Charles W. Smith and John E. Crum.

Deputy Sheriff Raymond Bowers, of Brunswick, at the same time raided the Silver Slipper, a beer parlor near Jefferson, and seized one machine.

The raids were the first concerted effort made by the sheriff's office to check illegal slot machine business since the present administration took office.

Nice to Give Relief Plans InRadioTalk

Schedules a 30-Minute Address 2 Days Before Inauguration.

Schedule of Ceremony for Next Wednesday Is Arranged.

Baltimore, Md., Jan. 3 (AP).—As plans for his inauguration as Maryland's Governor near completion, Harry W. Nice announced today he would take his social welfare plans direct to the people.

Gov.-elect Nice plans to make a 30-minute radio address Monday night on unemployment relief, unemployment insurance and old-age pensions. It was not indicated in the announcement of the speech how far he would go into the subjects before presenting them to the General Assembly.

The address will be made two days before Nice is to be installed in the chief executive's chair, terminating the 15-year reign of Albert C. Ritchie. Inauguration plans were announced during the day by Frederick R. Huber, who was director of the arrangements.

Schedule of Ceremony.

The schedule calls for the administration of the oath of office to Nice by Chief Judge Carroll T. Bond, of the Court of Appeals, at noon Wednesday in the Senate chamber of the Statehouse. Members of the State Legislature, the judges of the Court of Appeals and many invited guests are to attend the ceremony.

The day's program will open with a concert by the United States Naval Academy Band under direction of Lieut. W. R. Sima at 11 a. m. The legislators will assemble in the Senate chamber at 11:45 o'clock and a legislative escort will go to the executive mansion to accompany Nice to the hall.

After the administration of the oath, the members of the House of Delegates will adjourn to their chamber while Nice announces his nomination as secretary of State. Thomas Dawson, of Rockville, has been most prominently mentioned for this office. Confirmation is generally a routine matter by the Senate.

The new Governor and the Senators will go to the House chamber, where the former will deliver his inaugural address. It will last about an hour and be presented as his first message to the General Assembly. Nice later will administer the oath of office to his new secretary of State.

Informal Reception.

An informal reception will be given in the afternoon at the old Senate chamber, followed by a luncheon at the executive mansion for close friends of Gov. and Mrs. Nice.

The filling of the Senate seat caused by the death of Thurman C. Atkinson, Democrat, of Baltimore, on New Year's Day, today occupied the attention of many State and political officials.

Isidor Goldstrom suggested to Nice that as a Democratic Senator was chosen in the Fifth Legislative District of Baltimore in November, the Republicans should concede the election and allow a Democrat to be named so as to save the cost of a special election.

Senator Lansdale G. Sasscer, newly elected president of the State Senate, today was considering the possibility of calling a special election to name Atkinson's successor. He will determine whether it is mandatory or advisable for the election, the cost of which has been estimated at $25,000.

Oath Is Taken By Radcliffe

Senator From Maryland Answers First Roll Call in Congress.

Senator George L. Radcliffe (Democrat), of Maryland, yesterday took the oath of his office and answered his first roll call. Senator Radcliffe succeeded Phillips Lee Goldsborough, a Republican. Mr. Radcliffe was assigned a desk on the last row on the crowded Democratic side of the chamber.

The Marylander was escorted to the rostrum and presented to Vice President John N. Garner for the oath by Senator Josiah W. Bailey (Democrat), of North Carolina. It is customary for a new Senator's colleague to escort him, but Senator Millard E. Tyding (Democrat), of Maryland, is absent from the country, being on "an official errand" to the Philippine Islands, as Senator J. Hamilton Lewis, Democratic whip, explained it to the Senate.

Senator Radcliffe was assigned Mr. Goldsborough's former office suite. His first act was to have a Maryland flag hung on the wall. After the ceremonies he lunched in his office with a group of Maryland friends. Earlier in the day he announced the appointment of Miss Bertha Josephs as his secretary. She is a sister of the former Delegate at Annapolis from Baltimore, Daniel Josephs.

Clerk Slays Rail Official Of Roanoke

E. J. Tice Killed in Office by Aid Who Talked "Incoherently."

Murder Charge Faces J. W. Craig, 52, Who Admits Shooting.

Roanoke, Va., Jan. 3 (AP).—E. J. Tice, 51, assistant superintendent of transportation of the Norfolk & Western Railway Co., and one of the most popular officials of the railroad, was shot to death in his private office about 10:15 a. m. today by Jewett W. Craig, 52, of Vinton, clerk in the department.

E. M. Dickerson, chief clerk, witnessed the shooting and prevented a second bullet fired from a .32 Colt automatic from reaching its mark by grabbing Craig by the left arm.

Craig, who admitted the shooting, was arrested at the scene by Patrolman S. W. Simmons and docketed at police headquarters on a charge of murder. Commonwealth's Attorney Robert S. Smith said late today that any move to obtain bail for Craig would be vigorously opposed.

Dr. Charles M. Irvin, city coroner, said death was caused by an internal hemorrhage caused by the bullet, which entered the abdomen.

Dickerson's account of the shooting was that Craig reappeared in the department after saying that he was going home for the day because he did not feel like working, went directly to the office of Mr. Tice, and that a discussion of some sort ensued between the two men.

In a few minutes, Dickerson said, Tice called for him and explained that Craig had been talking incoherently and that he could not understand what the man wanted to say.

"I walked up and tok Craig by the left arm," Dickerson added, "and pulled him up to his feet and told him that he ought to go home. Mr. Ice was standing on the opposite side of the desk, slightly leaning as he busied himself preparing papers. Suddenly Craig's right hand slipped into his overcoat pocket and whipped out the gun and fired. I succeeded in twisting him around somewhat as he fired the second time. The bullet from the second shot thudded into the office wall."

The railroad official screamed and toppled over. J. E. Farmer, his secretary, was the first to reach him. He expired a short time later. Dickerson and other employes held Craig in the office until Patrolman Simmons arrived and placed him under arrest.

Wheat Values Close Higher Despite Selling

Cotton Prices Decline Under Realizing; Down 1 to 5 Points.

Chicago, Jan. 3 (AP).—Swayed chiefly by inflation talk and by forecasts of a cold wave, grain prices scored material upturns at times today.

Bills introduced at Washington by various Congressmen did much to arouse talk about likelihood of inflationary enactments. Reports of dust storms in domestic winter crop territory Southwest tended further to lift wheat values.

Selling to realize profits led to a late reaction, and wheat closed unsettled, ⅝ to 1 cent above yesterday's finish; May, 99⅜-½; corn unchanged to one-half higher; May, 85 to 85⅛, and provisions, varying from 17 cents decline to a rise of 20 cents.

Adding to the upward impetus of the wheat market were unofficial reports that domestic farm stocks of wheat would show a greater disappearance than has generally been expected. Notice was also taken of extreme scantiness of primary receipts, the total being only 127,000 bushels today. Undoing of spread trades between here and the Northwest served as a contributing bullish factor.

Cotton Market

New York, Jan. 3 (AP).—Cotton lost a few points of its recent gains during today's trading under realizing and a little scattered selling, which seemed to be influenced by rather reactionary markets abroad and the earlier ruling of the early grain market.

General business was restricted by a disposition to await the President's message to Congress tomorrow and trading was comparatively quiet.

After selling off to 12.65 for March and 12.60 for October, or about 5 to 7 points net lower, prices steadied slightly on covering. March was holding around 12.69 in the mid-afternoon market, when active months generally were 1 to 4 points net lower.

Futures closed steady, 1 to 5 lower.

Year-End Forecasts by Seasoned Observers Reflect Belief That Consumer Will Feel First Effects Of Drought in Next Few Months.

New York, Jan. 3.—Year-end forecasts by seasoned observers in close touch with the situation reflect the practically unanimous belief that the American consumer will, during the next few months, for the first time feel the full force of the drought in the prices that he will have to pay for many food products.

A number of foodstuffs, after some weeks of hesitation following the higher levels reached in the early fall, have of late shown a rather marked disposition to start another prolonged rise at wholesale. The statistical position of a number of these foodstuffs, and the current rate at which they are being shipped to the primary markets, lead most students of the situation to predict higher rather than lower prices in the wholesale markets, at least until next summer, when the outlook for the new crop becomes the dominant factor in the markets.

But, from the viewpoint of the consumer, this is by no means the full story. Neither manufacturers' nor retail prices have as yet uniformly reflected the advances that have already been registered in the raw materials and the wholesale markets.

Take the case of grains and cereal products, for example. During the year ended with November, wholesale prices of grains, according to the Department of Labor, rose somewhat more than 42 per cent. They are actually somewhat higher now. Nevertheless, wholesale prices of cereal products, that is, foodstuffs manufactured from grains, such as corn meal, wheat flour, breakfast cereals, and the like, rose during the same period only by about 6 per cent. Retail prices of cereal products, according to the Department of Labor, rose during the year ended early in December by something less than 6 per cent.

Reasons for Manufactured Products' Slower Advance.

There are a number of reasons why such manufactured products have not risen in price at as rapid a pace as have the raw materials. There are likewise some good reasons why they should not in the future fully reflect these increases merely on the strength of enhancement in the costs of raw materials. Raw material costs are by no means the only costs to which the manufacturers are subject, and in some instances are not even the major item of expense. A good many of these products, moreover, are marketed as branded goods to which a conventional price is attached which does not change as readily as open market prices of raw materials in general. But, after all, a rise of only a little more than 6 per cent in the manufactured articles in the face of an increase of 42 per cent or more in the cost of raw materials, particularly when it is known that various other costs have also been moving upward, can hardly be considered normal or likely to endure. The fact that retail prices have kept pace with wholesale prices strongly suggests that further marked increases in wholesale prices of manufactured foods will be reflected at retail, although, of course, it is in the retail trade that consumer resistance is most directly felt.

Wholesale Prices of Meats Rise Faster Than Live Stock.

Turn next to live stock and meats. Here, the wholesale price of meats has risen faster than that of live stock and poultry. The index number of the Department of Labor for the former has risen approximately 42 per cent during the past year, while that for the latter has risen only about 31 per cent. But, according to most observers, live stock prices are now destined to move upward substantially. The retail price index of meats, however, has risen only about 18.5 per cent during the past year. Dairy products prices have increased at wholesale around 17 per cent, while at retail the advance has been slightly less than 10 per cent. Fruits and vegetables, which have shown a 10 per cent decline at retail despite a 6 per cent rise at wholesale, are now being affected by reports of weather damage in producing areas.

The trend of the cost of living is of special interest to the business community because of the possibility of discontent among employes if a substantial further increase occurs. The food cost of living, at retail, is now approximately 27.5 per cent below that obtaining at the end of 1929, while wholesale prices of foods are around 31 per cent below that level. The average consumer, however, is not likely to compare the prices he is asked to pay at the butchers or the grocers with those he paid in 1929. He is much more likely to compare them with those of a year or two ago, before the recovery measures of the New Deal came into being.

The increase in retail food prices during the past two years has been somewhat more than 16 per cent. If the consumer is presently asked to pay, say, about 25 or 30 per cent more than late in 1932, what will his response be? To what degree will it affect consumption, and to what extent will it alter his view of national policies and in what direction?

Bond Market Driven Higher In Heavy Sales

Federal Issues Close Mixed; Trading Climbs to $21,505,000.

New York, Jan. 3 (AP).—In one of the most active sessions in nearly six months, all groups of domestic corporate bonds made substantial advances in today's listed market.

United States Governments were mixed and the foreign section was unsettled by weakness in South American issues.

Transfers aggregated $21,505,000, par value, the largest turnover since last August 9, and compared with $9,617,000 Wednesday. Transactions in Federal loans aggregated $10,670,000, against $1,990,000 the day before.

The Associated Press average for 20 railroad bonds advanced ½ point to 86.92, that for 10 industrials was .19 higher at 93.19, and the composite for 10 utilities gained .43 to 84.89.

The favorites included American Water Works 6s, up 2½ points at 75½; Colon Oil 6s, up 3 at 41; Great Northern 5½s, up 2⅜ at 86½, and International Great Northern 5s, up 3½ at 36½.

United States Governments were mixed at the close and gilt-edge corporate issues were generally a trifle higher. The Associated Press average for 10 low-yield bonds advanced .09 to 108.10. The new 3¼ Treasury loan attracted the most attention and was 2-32nds higher at 101.24 after dipping to 101.18 in early trading.

Pronounced weakness in a number of South American loans, particularly Brazilian obligations, unsettled the foreign section. Advices from Rio de Janeiro indicated a shortage of foreign exchange with which to service debt obligations of both the Federal and State Governments. The Brazilian 6⅛s yielded 3¼ points to 28¼. Several municipal issues were that much lower.

France Makes Heavy Slash In U. S. Apples

Quota of First Quarter Cut From 22,000 to 6,790 Tons.

Paris, Jan. 3 (AP).—A heavy cut in the United States' share of France's quota for apple and pear importations for the first quarter of 1935 was announced today.

Importers said they had been informed by the government the United States has been assigned 61,500 quintals (approximately 6,790 tons) as compared with 200,000 quintals (approximately 22,000 tons) for the first quarter of last year.

Dealers asserted they had tried unsuccessfully to learn why the reduction in the United States quota had been made and to whom the rest of the apple and pear quota had been assigned. A total of 220,000 quintals (approximately 24,255 tons) remains to be fulfilled after reduction of the quota designated for the United States.

Considerable concern was expressed over the move by fruit importers, who said they had more than 61,500 quintals of apples and pears in storage or en route in expectation that the American quota would be at least three times that figure. They said they did not know what they would do with the excess fruit, although there is a heavy demand in France for both apples and pears.

Stocks Capture Fractional Rise In Active Sales

Gains Range to 2 Points; Trading Volume Up to 1,062,546 Shares.

New York, Jan. 3 (AP).—Securities markets perked up considerably today with shares registering numerous gains of fractions to more than two points in somewhat more active trading.

Wall Street found nothing startling in the day's trade news. The increase of 7.2 per cent in electric power over the like week last year was favorably received, although in the preceding week the rise in power over a year ago was 7.9 per cent.

Retail trade is slowing down as is usual after the holiday spurt, while a number of heavy industries are emerging from a seasonally slack period.

Freight Loads Lower.

Preliminary estimates of last week's freight loadings disclosed sharply lower totals than in the preceding week as is usual at this season. It appeared that loadings were also somewhat less than in the like week of last year, however.

Wall Street did not jump to hasty conclusions concerning the removal of Clement Moret as head of the Bank of France, although the move excited wide interest in most circles as to whether it signified any radical change in French financial policies. Gold bloc currencies, as a matter of fact, continued to improve.

In contrast with yesterday's hesitancy among the rails and utilities, shares in both these groups joined the industrials in the rise, although their forwardness was not quite so pronounced. The Associated Press average of 60 stocks went ahead 29, to 40.96. Trading included more issues and sales were about 182,000 larger than yesterday, at 1,062,546 shares.

On Gaining List.

Shares up fractionally included Woolworth, Allied Chemical, American Telephone, Anaconda, Santa Fe, Baltimore & Ohio, Bethlehem Steel and American Smelting, which touched a new high.

Small losses fell to Westinghouse, American Can, Consolidated Gas, General Electric, International Harvester and Montgomery Ward.

United States Steel common braced up ½ to finish at 38¾, while Steel preferred was steady at 86½, up ½.

Stocks which bucked up to new highs for the past 12 months or longer were Continental Can and American Sumatra Tobacco.

Freight Loads Expected to Rise in Quarter

Cars of 29 Commodities Estimated Now at 4,528,744.

Freight car loadings in the first quarter of 1935 are expected to be about six-tenths of 1 per cent above actual loadings in the same quarter in 1934, according to estimates just compiled by the 13 shipper's regional boards and made public today.

On the basis of these estimates, freight car loadings of the 20 principal commodities will be 4,528,744 cars in the first quarter of 1935, compared with 4,500,200 actual loadings for the same commodities in the corresponding period last year.

Six of the 13 shippers' regional advisory boards estimate an increase in the loadings for the first quarter of 1935, compared with the same period in 1934, while seven estimate a decrease.

The tabulation below shows the total loading for each district for the first quarter of 1934, the estimated loadings for the first quarter of 1935, and the percentage of increase or decrease.

Curb's Prices Advance on Buying Drive

Specialties Score Upturns as Sales Mount to 226,000 Shares.

New York, Jan. 3 (AP).—Selective buying gave the curb market a firm appearance today. Trading was active. Advances among various specialties, including alcohols and metals, ranged from 1 to 3 points. A number of industrials maintained a narrow range.

Among distillery issues, Hiram Walker rose 3 points, while Distillers Corporation-Seagrams and Canadian Industrial Alcohol "A" gained about a point each. Columbia Pictures got up more than 4 points in a light buying flurry. Other gainers of 1 to 2 or more points included Mead Johnson, New Jersey Zinc, Newmont, Consolidated Gas & Electric of Baltimore, A. O. Smith, Parke Davis and General Tire & Rubber.

Pepperell Manufacturing steadied somewhat following its sharp decline yesterday.

Transfers approximated 226,000 shares, compared with 153,000 the day before.

Helen Jacobs, Fred Perry Ready to Become Net Pros, Promoter States

$20,000 Bid For Woman Champion

British Ace to Receive $40,000, According to O'Brien.

Mrs. Whittingstall Also Reported in Line for Contract.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3 (AP).—Bill O'Brien, sports promoter, announced tonight he had cabled an offer to Helen Jacobs, national tennis champion, to turn professional which "I know she will accept."

O'Brien declared his offer, cabled to Miss Jacobs, who now is in England, called for the American women's title holder to receive $20,000 for a professional tour beginning March 20 in Madison Square Garden and lasting through June.

O'Brien said that two weeks ago he had offered Miss Jacobs $15,000 and that she had cabled from London that she wanted more money.

Contract Mailed.

"I cabled her early today," O'Brien said, "that I would give her $20,000. I know that this is what she wanted and I know that she will accept. I mailed a contract at those figures to her."

At the same time, the promoter declared that Mrs. Fearnley Whittingstall, the former Eileen Bennett, of England, definitely had accepted an offer of $10,000 to turn professional, and indicated that Fred Perry, of England, rated the world's leading singles player, would sign a contract as soon as he returns to this country from Australia.

$40,000 for Perry.

O'Brien said that his representative on the Pacific Coast, Silas Masters, had received a cable on Saturday from Perry, asking Masters to have a contract ready for him when he arrives in San Francisco February 23.

Perry will receive $40,000, O'Brien said, for a tour with Ellsworth Vines, Miss Jacobs and Mrs. Whittingstall.

O'Brien made it clear that none of the three definitely had signed contracts, but said he was satisfied that all three would formally relinquish their amateur standing within the next few weeks.

Woodlander Wins At Alamo Downs

Keeton Entry Is Victor in Handicap Event.

San Antonio, Texas, Jan. 3 (AP).—Woodlander, owned and trained by G. Keeton, scored a hard-earned victory today in the six-furlong Alamo Lumber Co. Handicap at Alamo Downs.

The 4-year-old son of Rolled Stocking and Rosewood came from far back to win by a nose over Good Scout, which races for Fine and Fullwood. C. E. Davison's Technocracy was third in the field of 11 starters. The time was 1:14.

Woodlander, paying $17.40 straight, and ridden by R. G. Cooper, came around the leaders in the stretch run after having trailed far back throughout. Zorana led the field to the head of the stretch, but weakened. Good Scout held a brief lead in the last furlong, but could not outlast the winner. Technocracy, rated in third place throughout, held on well.

West Virginia 'Czar' Sought for Schools

Charleston, W. Va., Jan. 3 (Spl.). A "czar" to govern all State high school athletics is to be sought by the West Virginia Football Officials' Association.

Affairs of the association will be directed next year by Dr. Carl P. Schott, director of physical education at West Virginia University, who was chosen to succeed J. Patrick Beacom, president, at the annual meeting of the association. Other officers include C. W. Strickling, of Huntington; Joe L. Silverstein, of Charleston, and Ward Lanham, of Fairmont, vice presidents; Philip H. Hill, of Charleston, secretary, and John Durkin, of Huntington, assistant secretary.

Baer-Hunt Broadcast.

The Max Baer-Babe Hunt four-round exhibition in Detroit tonight will be broadcast over radio Station WOL between 9:45 and 10:15 o'clock.

Tunney, Friends Buy Fishing Site

Palm Beach, Fla., Jan. 3 (Spl.). Gene Tunney, Beeman G. Dawes and Harold Christy have purchased the south end of Bimini Island from the British government.

Dawes is the brother of Charles G. Dawes, Vice President of the United States in the Coolidge Administration. Harold Christy is an Englishman from Nassau, one of the Bahama group of islands. Tunney, of course, is the former heavyweight champion. They intend to operate this section of the island as a fishing camp—one of the finest ever established in the history of angling.

Bimini is the place for large denizens of the deep. Huge tuna and marlin swordfish abound in these waters. The best time to seek them, however, is during May and June. The formation of the bay about Bimini is ideal for bone fish and here, in my opinion, is one of the best places along the Atlantic seaboard to seek these pearl and silver flashes of lightning.

Neyland Starts For Panama Army Post

Tennessee Grid Coach to Be Away From Game for Two Years.

By Dillon L. Graham
(Associated Press Sports Writer).

ARMY traveling orders in his pocket, Maj. Robert Neyland—who built an unusual record as Tennessee's gridiron coach—said goodbye to football today and turned toward Panama to begin a two-year assignment.

His nine-season stretch at the University of Tennessee ended less than a month ago when his Volunteers brought him a victory over Huey Long's ballyhooed Louisiana State eleven.

His new Army papers signed, Neyland left here early this afternoon for New York. He will sail in a few days for his post at Corozal, near Panama City. He likely will command a battalion of engineers.

Has No Grid Plans.

The tall, black-haired major has no plans now, other than those concerning his Army orders.

"I don't know what the future may hold for me in a football way," he said. "I'm not thinking of that now. I prefer to wait until I am transferred to this country again to consider anything that might be connected with the gridiron game."

Newland is saying goodby, indeed, to football, for he will not see a game during the next two years. He hopes to keep his contacts with football through the newspapers and through letters from his assistants still at Tennessee.

Record Is Impressive.

"However, with no coaching to do, I may find some leisure time down there to do some thinking and football figuring of my own," he laughed.

Neyland's Tennessee record is one of the best ever built up by any mentor—76 victories, 7 losses and 5 tie games in nine years.

He regards the 1934 Alabama team, victor two days ago over Stanford in the Rose Bowl, as the greatest team his Tennessee elevens faced during his long term there. He ranks Dixie Howell, Alabama's star half back, as the best player any Tennessee team has met.

Holman, Celtics Star, Will Oppose Heurichs

Nat Holman, one of the Nation's most famous basket ball players, will appear here with the New York Celtics against the Heurich professional team next month, Bob MacDonald, Heurich manager, stated last night. Holman is coach of the City College of New York.

The game will be played on a Sunday, possibly February 17.

MacDonald also announced that the new gym adjoining the brewery will be opened for play on January 20, when the Heurich team engages the Boston Americans.

Ohio Coach May Take S. C. Post

Columbia, S. C., Jan. 3 (AP).—Don McCallister, 31-year-old coach at Waite High School, Toledo, Ohio, was being mentioned today as a possible successor to W. L. Laval as head football coach at the University of South Carolina.

Dr. L. T. Baker, president of the university, indicated that the trustees and athletic advisory board would not act for several days to appoint a successor to the veteran Laval, whose contract, expiring January 1, was not renewed.

The Columbia Record says today the field of possibilities has been narrowed to three: McCallister, Jimmy Kitts, of Rice University, and an unnamed "former All-American and Rose Bowl star."

John Marshall Considering Leverton

Richmond U. Star, Former Central High Athlete, May Be Coach.

ROGER LEVERTON, of Washington, all-around athlete at University of Richmond, has been prominently mentioned for the post of football coach at John Marshall High School, Richmond, it was learned yesterday.

One of the greatest athletes ever produced at Richmond, the former Central High School boy will receive his diploma in June, after which he plans to study law at the same college.

A four-letter athlete, Leverton was full back on the football team, plays second base in baseball, captins the basket ball team and is a str hurdler in track. He is president of the senior class, member of the Omicron Delta Kappa, national honorary fraternity, and his grades have been just short of qualifying him for Phi Beta Kappa.

At Central High Leverton distinguished himself only as a swimmer and diver, and it was not until he entered college that he began to sparkle in the four major sports.

Others mentioned for the school post are Roy Dunn, former V. M. I. star; Roland Day, coach at Petersburgh High, and Johnny Doyle, former West Virginia football star.

Virginia Frosh to Play Tech, Episcopal Fives

University, Va., Jan. 3 (Spl.). Tech High, of Washington, and Episcopal High School, of Alexandria, are listed among the 11 teams Virginia's freshman basket ball team will play this winter.

Tech High will be played here on February 1, while the Cavalier yearlings will engage Episcopal High in the Alexandria gym on February 6.

The schedule:

January 12, Washington and Lee, in Lexington; 16, Petersburg High School, here; 18, V. M. I., in Lexington; 19, Woodberry Forest, here; 24, Fork Union, here; 30, Woodberry Forest, at Orange.

February 1, Tech High, Washington, here; 6, Episcopal High School, in Alexandria; 15, Washington and Lee, here; 18, Staunton Military Academy, here.

New College Circuit in Prospect

Two Chesapeake Members Ready to Join With Carolina Schools.

A NEW alignment of colleges in Virginia and the Carolinas was seen in prospect last night as Hampden-Sidney and Randolph-Macon were reported ready to drop out of the youthful Chesapeake Conference to join with 12 other institutions of approximately their own size in forming a new sports circuit.

Available officials at American University, local member of the Chesapeake loop, were unaware of any impending changes in the group which now includes Bridgewater and Lynchburg, in addition to Hampden-Sidney and Randolph-Macon, but it was learned from other sources that the two Old Dominion colleges are in a receptive mood to suggestions from the Carolinas that a new conference would be beneficial.

Emory and Henry and Roanoke are other Virginia schools mentioned in connection with the proposed circuit, which would encompass all Old Dominion and Carolina institutions not now members of the Southern Conference or applicants for membership in that circuit.

George Pins Rival In Mat Duel Here

Johansen Is Defeated in 2 of 3 Falls.

Ed (Don) George, recognized as heavyweight wrestling champion in some quarters, retained his claim to the crown by disposing of Tor Johansen in a three-fall wrestling match which delighted some 2,000 addicts at the Auditorium last night.

Johansen won the first fall in 20½ minutes by forcing George to resign in a leg stretch. The second fall went to George in seven minutes, as he picked up his 315-pound opponent, spun him in an airplane spin and splashed him to the canvas for the necessary three-count. The third fall went to George after 14 minutes on a body slam.

George Meske and Rudy Dusek wrestled 45 minutes to a draw in a blood and thunder semifinal. In a couple of preliminaries scheduled for 30 minutes, Dr. Henry Fields tossed Stan Sokolis with a flying scissors in 15½ minutes and Willie Davis flattened Henry Piers in 20 minutes with a crotch hold and body slam.

Basket Ball Drills Resumed by Navy

Begin Work for Baltimore Game Saturday.

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Preparing for their inaugural game on Saturday against University of Baltimore, Navy basket ball players had an extensive practice session this afternoon and another similar workout is scheduled for tomorrow. Head Coach John N. Wilson said his charges are in good shape, although activities were resumed only yesterday following their return from Christmas leave.

The Middies anticipate a tough argument with the Baltimoreans, who have a husky and experienced aggregation, and who probably will have the advantage in condition, having played through the holiday period.

St. John's College loopsters, with two preday holiday victories under their belt, will leave tomorrow for Lexington, Va., for a two-day stay. Saturday night they will clash with Virginia Military Institute and Monday night, Washington and Lee.

Terry Will Revisit 1934 Cities, Make Amends for His Insults

By Jimmy Powers
(Pinch Hitting for Paul Gallico).

NEW YORK, Jan. 3.—On the New York Giants' second road trip to St. Louis last year a gathering of 1,200 sandlot kids was snubbed by Manager Bill Terry. This gave a waggish local reporter inspirations for a sports editorial. Incidents of Terry's unwarranted conceit were gone into in entertaining detail. All through the yarn the writer referred to his subject as a heel. From time to time he would excuse himself in print and say "Mr. Heel."

Soon after this, the clippings sped along the dugout grapevine. In no time the jockeys, the goat-getters, picked it up. When we came to Philadelphia, Jimmy Wilson hollered "Hello, Mr. Heel!" When we came to Boston, Al Spohrer cupped his battered fingers and bellowed it. It was the same in Pittsburgh and Cincinnati. In Chicago the fans smacked their palms in a chant whenever Terry appeared at the plate. "Get-your-hit-heel!" they shouted in derisive unison. Terry, to his credit, grimned after this one and said, "They're not polite; they forgot the 'Mister.'"

Was Hard to Swallow.

Now, all this abuse was pretty hard for a man to swallow. McGraw took worse in his time. So did Ruth and Cobb. They would have sneered at Terry's sissy riding; but, nevertheless, it was a riding and an unusually severe one for this era of bridge-playing and tuxedo-wearing ball players.

Terry took his like a man; and

U. S. Owners List Horses At Aintree

Americans Enter Eight Thoroughbreds in Grand National.

Golden Miller and Fobra Only Past Victors Due to Run.

LONDON, Jan. 3 (AP).—Sixty of the leading steeplechase horses of the world, including the 1932 and 1934 winners and eight American-owned jumpers, today were nominated for racing's most gruelling test of horseflesh, the ninety-sixth running of the Grand National at Aintree on March 29. Of these at least 30 are expected to start.

Heading the list is Golden Miller, Dorothy Paget's big jumper, which won last year; J. B. Snow's Delaneige and J. H. (Jock) Whitney's Thomond II, the two American-owned mounts which finished second and third, respectively, in the 1934 renewal.

The United States also can claim an interest in Golden Miller, as Miss Paget is a cousin of the Whitneys.

Other United States Entries.

The other American entries are M. D. Blair's Fouquet, George H. (Pete) Bostwick's Castle Irwell (which the little American sportsman probably willl ride himself), Whitney's Royal Ransom and Double Crossed, and Kiltoi and Theras, owned by the South Carolinian, Jesse Metcalf.

In addition to Golden Miller, the only other former winner entered is Forbra, which won in 1932, and which has been put up for sale by the estate of the late C. M. Parsonage. It is the first time in the history of the classic a horse has been entered by other than a living man.

The weights will be announced next month.

The complete list:

Golden Miller, Forbra, Thomond II, Royal Ransom, Double Crossed, Kiltoi, Theras, Castle Irwell, Delaneige, Fouquet, Avenger, Reynolds Town, Oll Deboeuf, Dream Ship, Southern Hero, Red Park, Blue Prince, Jimmy James, Southern Hue, Remus, Slater, Society, Ready Cash, Quite Calm, Coup de Chapeau, Drintyre, Uncle Batt, Ball Brack, Kakushin, Shoreman, Brave Cry, Francolino, Master Orange, Moorland View, Noiseau, Alarmist, Huicholloa, Tapinois, Prince Madoc, Bachelor Prince, Coolavach, Alexena, Rich Borough, Lazy Boots, Glen Hazel, Montefiume, Nearest, Princess Mir, Thrumster, Jack Drummer, Buck Willow, News Item, Alpine Hut, Harpooner and Gomar.

Virginia's Boxing Body Won't Rule Colleges

The Virginia boxing commission has practically abandoned the idea of taking control of college boxing in the State, it was learned at the last meeting of the governing body. While the question of control of college bouts was not raised, the commission intimated that it hoped commission referees would be used as much as possible—a tacit admission that no effort would be made to assume jurisdiction over collegiate clouting.

The commission also ruled that promoters now licensed could work on fees already paid until their respective years had elapsed. Thus, a promoter licensed last July 1 will be allowed to run on that license until next July 1. After that, the fee will be prorated for the remainder of the year.

Eastern Boy Honored By Rifle Association

Victor Hage, of Eastern High School, has qualified as an expert rifleman in the junior division of the National Rifle Association. Only a distinguished rifleman tops the expert rifleman. Hage is a member of the school rifle clubs.

During the past year 311 juniors qualified as expert rifleman and 62 as distinguished rifleman in the United States, the National Association announced.

Eligibility Rules Tightened by Irish

Notre Dame Ends Stagger Plan for Athletes.

South Bend, Ind., Jan. 3 (U.P.).—Notre Dame's athletic constitution was revised today, tightening eligibility requirements.

In the future, players may not compete in athletics after their eighth semester in school. Thus any player who is out with injuries automatically will use up his eligibility. Neither will it be possible to hold a player out a season, hoping he may be more valuable in some future season.

Truce Is Seen As Hubbell Is Signed

Put on Block Recently, Star Hurler Is First Giant in Fold.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3 (U.P.).—Pitcher Carl Hubbell's signed contract for 1935 arrived at the New York Giants' office today, indicating that the rift between the screwball king and Manager Bill Terry has been patched up and that Terry's efforts to peddle Carl down the river have ended.

Hubbell's signature also assured the National League that its two ace flingers have entered their folds without a hold-out struggle. Dizzy Dean signed with the St. Louis Cardinals on December 5. Incidentally, Dean and Hubbell are the first major leaguers to accept contracts for 1935.

They shared pitching honors in their circuit for 1934, Hubbell being the most effective hurler with the lowest average of 2.30 earned runs allowed per nine-inning game. Carl also pitched the most complete games, 25. Dizzy won the most games, 30, and finished with the highest won and lost percentage, .811, having lost only seven.

Also First in 1934.

Last year Hubbell also was the first Giant to sign, his contract arriving on January 17, two weeks later than this time. In the 1934 contract he received a raise of $6,000, which boosted his salary to $18,000. It is understood he is working on the same $18,000 basis for 1935.

Newspapermen who traveled with the Giants claim Terry and Hubbell had several arguments in the closing stages of the 1934 pennant race when the team was slipping and nerves were on edge. The writers alleged that when Terry attempted to bawl out Hubbell for his pitching or for fielding miscues, Hubbell came back with charges of being overworked. In fact, the Oklahoman even told reporters that overwork had made him stale. Terry is understood to have been furious over the statement.

The climax came at the post-season Louisville minor league meetings when Memphis Bill announced that Hubbell was on the block; that he would like to send him to Pittsburgh for Southpaw Larry French and Outfielder Freddy Lindstrom. At that time the Giants needed a center fielder. Since then that hole was plugged by getting back Kiddo Davis from the Phillies.

Finally Admitted.

At the December major league meetings Terry admitted he had tried to dispose of Hubbell to Louisville, but claimed his offer had been merely as an attempt to prevent a Chicago-Pittsburgh deal, which went through anyway. But when pressed, Terry finally said, "Yes," he would have let Hubbell go to Pittsburgh if Pie Traynor had agreed to the deal. But he didn't think Hubbell bore him any grudge for putting him on the block, because "ball players expect that sort of thing."

Hubbell, indeed, did plenty of work during 1934, pitching a total of 313 innings during the regular campaign, in addition to doing his share during the long grind of 36 training games. No other pitcher in either league pitched so many innings during the regular season.

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich

MR. ARTHUR J. "DUTCH" BERGMAN, Catholic University's football coach, was busily affixing his spanking new 1935 license plates to the family car and making right good headway, too, when the cry of "soup's on," or something, rent the air. Mr. Bergman hastened into the house to partake of his New Year's Day dinner.

BERGMAN

It must have been a fine repast, indeed, for when the last drumstick had disappeared, Mr. Bergman was disposed to invite the entire family for a motor ride. So, with Dutch at the wheel, the Bergmans joined the cavalcade that was heading for the Speedway. And a beautiful New Year's Day it was. The night's snow had mantled everything round about in white; the chill had already left the air, and nature was exuding peace on earth and good-will.

What should interrupt this family scene but the putt-putt of a motor cop, who was already bellowing in Mr. Bergman's ear before Mr. Bergman could bring his car to a halt. He was saying something about last year's license tags, and Dutch, remembering his labors of the morning, was not only puzzled but indignant. Leading the officer to the front of his car, he pointed to the bright, new tag and shouted:

"Whaddaya think that says, 1901, or something, you cross-eyed chump."

The cop looked and rubbed his eyes. Then he took Dutch in tow and led him to the rear. There was the tell-tale yellow and black of the 1934 tags. Dutch had forgotten completely about that rear tag in his haste for dinner.

"And whaddaya think that says, 1937, ya dummy," bellowed the cop. And Dutch laughed. And they both laughed. And the Bergmans received special dispensation to continue their New Year's Day ride.

AT this season of the year, when contracts are put in the mails, the affairs of the Washington Ball Club become distinctly private, with President Griffith declining to divulge the salary terms of his ball players on the grounds that the matter of wages is personal with the players and the club. At every other season of the year, the baseball people like to call their business a civic enterprise, publicly supported and publicly acclaimed.

But, be that as it may, there are two among Mr. Griffith's ball players who can expect to be dealt with generously in the matter of salary terms in their 1935 contracts. I refer to those two perennial rookies, Bobby Burke and Cliff Bolton, who are in a powerful position to demand increased wages.

Burke, particularly can count his presence vital to the Nats in 1935. With Bucky Harris crying for pitching talent, Griffith can ill afford to offend Burke's tender sensibilities of his worth. The lean left-hander was, actually, the best pitcher on the Washington Club in 1934, according to the earned run averages, which is the most accurate gauge of a pitcher's worth.

IF the Washington club is to have a pitching staff in 1935 it must be built about Burke. The slender southpaw seems finally to have arrived as a big leaguer after nine years in the big leagues and is the only young pitcher on the squad who promises to bloom as a regular. The veterans, Whitehill and Stewart, are beyond the age about which pitching staffs can be built, and Monte Weaver is fast earning the reputation of a confirmed in-and-outer.

One of the tragedies of the Nats last season was the pitiful attempts of Manager Joe Cronin to keep his club in the race without a catching staff. With Luke Sewell hurt and Moe Berg and Eddie Phillips second-rate catchers at best, Griffith learned to rue the day that he failed to meet Cliff Bolton's demands for a $5,000 salary in the spring and kept the bottle-legged, little catcher out of baseball until September.

In those waning weeks of the season, Bolton demonstrated that he is the best catcher on the club. With Griffith making every effort to trade Luke Sewell for a pitcher, the Nats need Bolton, his hitting and his catching, no less than Hauptmann needs his alibi. When the time comes for Bolton and Griffith to talk salary terms, the powerful arguments will be on the side of the ball player.

Ruxton Rye

"EQUAL IN TASTE TO A TWO YEAR OLD RYE"

Say Prominent Chemists

. . . says prominent chemist, though Ruxton is aged 8 months.

When's the last time you tried Ruxton Rye? Well, try it now. It's as mellow and smooth a rye drink as ever rolled over your tongue.

And it should be, because Ruxton Rye is a 100% Maryland straight rye whiskey, with a 97½% rye grain content. You'll understand what that means when you taste Ruxton Rye. It is not artificially aged, flavored or colored. Ruxton Rye is natural through and through.

Excerpt from analysis: "This whiskey is of good flavor and corresponds to old-fashioned stored whiskey about two years old. It contains no artificial flavor or color."

Major General Beats Bubblesome by Length in Feature Race at Tropical Park

6-Year Old Pays $19.10 Mutuel

Clings to Early Lead; Late Date Far Back for Third Place.

TROPICAL PARK, Fla., Jan. 3 (AP).—Major General, which finished a bang-up second in his last two starts for Owner G. Boehle, stepped up into better company here today and surprised by winning the San Blas purse at long odds. The 6-year-old gelded son of Trojan made his own pace and drove first to the wire by a length, paying $19.10 for a $2 ticket. Jake Lowenstein's Bubblesome, the even money choice, beat the Audley Farm's Late Date, a newcomer here, by daylight for the place. The time for the mile and a sixteenth was 1:44 2-5.

Jockey Bobby Merritt, who gained quite a reputation on New York tracks last season, rode a cool, judicious race astride the elderly and improved Major General. The latter, as recently as October, ran for $1,200 in a claiming event at Empire City. He had all the speed of the six-horse field today and stuck it out courageously when challenged by the heavily backed Bubblesome, an impressive winner a few days ago.

Shakes Off Taunton.

Merritt sent the Major to the front in the run for positions and lost no time shaking off Taunton. Bubblesome began his move on the back stretch, but Major General held him safe all the way to the judges. Late Date finished steadily in the stretch and caught Taunton in the closing strides.

The bad luck of J. E. Widener's baby racers continued with the running of the opening event. Following the disqualification of Hiatus in the first juvenile event of the season, Cash Book, a heavy favorite from the same barn, was beaten a nose in today's 3-furlong test. J. J. Moran's Eddie C., paying $15.50, outlasted the Widener filly in a long, hard drive. Cash Book took the place by four lengths from Irish Play. The time was :35 4-5.

Unknown Soldier Wins.

Another favorite was nosed out when Transport just failed to catch Unknown Soldier, which closed at better than 4 to 1 in the second race. Beaver Dam was a well-beaten third, Apprentice J. Lynch took Unknown Soldier to the front in a jiffy and the gelded son of Man o' War drew clear, only to tire at the end. Transport forced most of the running and would have won in another stride or so.

Prince Drake broke the ice for form players, the colt outrunning 11 other sprinters with ease to take the third purse by three lengths. He paid $4.50. Merovech and Meteoric both finished resolutely, the former gaining second money by a head. Bobby Watson rated Prince Drake perfectly, his mount disposing of Grace Blotter and having plenty left to thwart later challenges.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MAJOR GENERAL, $19.10, $3.40, $3.00; BUBBLESOME, $2.50, $2.40; LATE DATE, $3.70.

MAJOR GENERAL, well ridden from the start, was whipped away from the stalls, ran into lead, and then was rated along to the stretch turn, where he had the race driving hard, and held on gamely. BUBBLESOME moved up with a rush, but could not get to the leader. LATE DATE was kept well up, came to the inside in stretch, and finished fast. TAUNTON ran a good race. HOWARD ran a good race for his first outing. CHERTRES was outrun.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $700; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 5:08½. Off at once. Winner, Mrs. F. P. Two-dollar mutuels paid—CHANCE FLIGHT, $6.90, $3.80, $2.70; VESTED POWER, $5.90, $3.60; MISS CAREFUL, $3.40.

CHANCE FLIGHT broke fast, was sent to the front going into first turn and, rated along, stood long drive gamely. VESTED POWER, rated along to the top of the stretch, where he closed with a rush, was wearing the winner down. MISS CAREFUL moved up gamely around turn and ran a good race. FOUR SPOT was a keen factor for a mile, then tired. FAIRLY WILD lacked speed and failed to close any ground. ALADDINS DREAM was outrun.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $700; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, easily. Went to post at 5:37. Off at 5:38. Winner, F. J. Kearns' ch. m. Roosevelt Five Runs Rampant in Last Half to Crush Alexandria High, 42 to 25

Rough Riders Take Sixth In Row

Capt. Donavan Is Leader With 17 Points; Score at Half, 10 to 7.

LED by Capt. Dave Donovan, Roosevelt High's smooth-clicking basket ball team buried Alexandria High's strong five, 42 to 25, yesterday on the Roosevelt floor. It was the Rough Riders' sixth straight win of the season.

Leading by only 3 points at the half, the Rough Riders widened their 10-7 advantage to 20-7 in the third quarter and coasted to victory in the last period.

Roosevelt held a 6-3 lead at the end of the first quarter. Donovan, who accounted for 17 points, managed to keep his team in front in the second quarter, but there was little to choose between the two outfits at this stage.

Three Quick Baskets.

Beginning with the second half, Donovan scored three baskets within 2 minutes to change the complexion of the game. Frank Bailey and Spiro Kolius, high-scoring forwards, applied the finishing touches to the period with a 2-pointer apiece before the third quarter ended.

Benny Burrel, Alexandria's star forward, helped close the gap in the last period but the closest the score ever became was 30-21. Coach Lynn Woodworth used substitutes freely in the final session.

The last time the two teams met, three weeks ago, Roosevelt barely outpointed its Virginia rival, 22-21, on the Alexandria court.

Central Five Tops St. John's, 35-14

Munhall and Vermillion Leaders in Attack.

Central High rang up its fourth basket ball victory in five starts yesterday, trouncing St. John's, 35 to 14, on hte St. John's court. The Mount Pleasanters showed considerable improvement over their appearance against the Johnnies three weeks ago when they won, 21 to 14.

Outclassing their opponents from the start, Coach Jack Rays' lads took a 16-to-6 lead in the first half while holding St. John's to one field goal.

Johnnie Munhall, towering Central forward, and Bill Vermillion, fast-dribbling Central guard, shared the scoring honors with 11 and 10 points apiece, respectively.

U. S. Trackmen Are Primed For 1935

Some Feel 1934 Records Will Stand; Season Opens Saturday.

NEW YORK, Jan. 3 (U.P.).—The brigade of top-notch American track and field athletes, who wrote a blazing new chapter into the record books during 1934, are primed for another banner year—a pre-Olympic year that will be ushered in officially Saturday night at the Brooklyn Knights of Columbus games.

Some of the Nation's more conservative observers insist that the athletes, although they are tuning up for the 1936 Berlin games, will not be able to equal the feats turned in during 1934, when 13 world records were shattered by United States aces at home and abroad.

Only super-men could surpass some of the marks turned in during the 1934 campaigns, they believe. They ask, who is going to beat Glenn Cunningham's 4:06.7 outdoor mile and 4:08.4 indoor mile, Bill Bonthron's 3:48.8 for 1,500 meters outdoors, Ben Eastman's outdoor ½-mile of 1:49.8, Jack Torrance's 57 feet 1 7-32-inch shotput, Walter Marty's sensational high jump of 6 feet 9⅛ inches, etc.?

Most Brilliant Array.

It is entirely conceivable that some of the 13 world marks established by Americans during the past year might endure for the next decade, but Dan Ferris, secretary of the Amateur Athletic Union, points out that the United States today has the most brilliant constellation of athletic stars in history, and that anything may happen.

Other optimists recall that at this time last year, the conservatives were telling the world that such marks as Jack Lovelock's outdoor mile mark of 4:07.6 would last for years. But the conservatives were routed completely, to take one instance, when Cunningham, the Kansas flier, swung around the cinder oval at Princeton's stadium fast enough to clip nearly a full second from Lovelock's mark.

Same Aces to Vie.

And the pursuit of the dream four-minute mile will go on this year, with virtually the same aces participating: Cunningham, Bonthron and Venzke. Newcomers are rising to challenge them. Among them are Harry Williamson, of North Carolina, the national junior champion, and Bill Ray, of Manhattan. In addition, Luigi Beccali, of Italy, and Eric Ny, of Sweden, will be tuning for the Olympics. The latter is expected to compete in the United States during the indoor season.

Red hot competition likewise seems certain in many other events. Ralph Metcalfe, Marquette's fleet Negro sprinter, who has been tops on the world cinder paths for the last three years, will defend his laurels indoors and out against such college youngsters as Jesse Owens, of Ohio State, and Ben Johnson, of Columbia. Henry Neilson, of Denmark, is coming to America, for the indoor season to try to pare down the distance marks. In the summer he registered a new world outdoor record of 8:18.4 for the 3,000 meters.

Virtually all of the record-breakers of 1934 are remaining in competition. Preparations for the Berlin games and pressure from new comers are expected generally to result in many new marks.

Inter-Suburban Loop Opens Schedule Today

Time has been definitely set at 3:30 p. m. for the opening of the newly formed Intersuburban High School League today at Hyattsville when Coach Lewter's Washington and Lee dribblers invade for the initial contest.

Both clubs have been practicing daily during the holidays and are ready for the inaugural, although they have their weakest teams in years. Silver Spring and Alexandria, the other members, delay league action until next week.

Post Mortems . . .

Sid Kolker, George Washington guard, has been selected on the All-Phi Alpha American team . . . some of the older jockeys riding on Florida tracks, who are obliged to shed poundage often, don a rubber suit, two or three sweaters and a top coat and tour the countryside on a slow jog . . . all of which is objected to by native Floridians, who would rather they would use the baths . . . contending their methods of reducing hamper the winter tourist trade when pictures go North showing them in heavy clothing beneath the palms . . . Elwood Ey, who is battling for a regular forward berth on the Roosevelt High team, has perhaps the shortest name in basket ball today . . . Emil Mashie, a Fitchburg, Mass., golf professional, has joined the winter golfing caravan . . . Mashie may be a chip off the old block . . . Spiro Kolas, high-scoring forward on the Roosevelt basket ball team, made two baskets within ten seconds against the Alexandria High School yesterday . . . And, Just 25 Years Ago Today: Charles Dooin, marksman, clubman and vaudevillian, was appointed manager of the Phillies ball team . . . at a salary reported to be $7,000 a year.

Sarron Is Hurt; Burl to Face Substitute

Pete Hayes Is Sought for Bout Next Tuesday at Auditorium.

PETE SARRON, the Alexandria featherweight, yesterday disrupted the plans of Matchmaker Cornell by reporting unfit for his 10-round bout against Eddie Burl which was to have marked Cornell's debut as boxing impresario at the Auditorium next Tuesday night.

Sarron injured his left rib and intercostal muscles by missing a punch tossed at a sparring partner in a workout Wednesday and yesterday was ordered by his physician to refrain from boxing for at least two weeks.

Cornell is attempting to sign Pete Hayes, third-ranking featherweight, as a substitute for Sarron. If Hayes is not available, California Joe Rivers, a Mexican featherweight, probably will be picked.

Ordered to Bed.

Sarron was forced to pull up in training Wednesday when a wallop he aimed at an inexperienced spar mate went amiss, causing what was at first believed to be a strained back muscle. He immediately was tightly strapped up and ordered to bed. Yesterday, the injury grew more painful and the battler was rushed to Dr. W. L. Schafer, of Alexandria.

"Physical examination shows a bruised left rib and intercostal muscles," Dr. Schafer diagnosed. "I advise Sarron not to box at all for at least two weeks."

Sarron had been scheduled to box some opponent not yet selected at the Arena in Philadelphia on January 14. Peter Moran, matchmaker at the Arena, was in New York yesterday, seeking to sign Kid Chocolate or some other outstanding featherweight for Sarron, when the doctor ordered him to cease training.

Alexandrians in Lengthy Workout for Battle at Armory Hall.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Jan. 3 (Spl.).—Columbia Fire Department's basket ball squad held a lengthy workout tonight in preparation for the invasion of the fast Stewart Pharmacy team tomorrow night at Armory Hall.

Stewart Pharmacy is one of the most successful quintets in Washington, having won 21 consecutive contests.

The Alexandria High School quintet travels to Nokesville tomorrow to engage the high school of that town. The Twins appeared to be ragged and far off form in their game with Roosevelt yesterday, which they lost by 17 points. It was their second loss of the season, Roosevelt having previously defeated them by one point.

The football game originally scheduled for New Year's Day between the Yellow Jackets and Doc West's All-Stars, will be played next Sunday, rain or shine.

Kentucky Green 2-Length Victor

Willa T. Finishes Second at Fair Grounds.

New Orleans, La., Jan. 3 (AP).—Mrs. H. Gorman's 3-year-old chestnut colt, Kentucky Green, a disappointment in his last outing, scored by two lengths today in the sixth and main event at the Fair Grounds.

T. A. Fowler's filly, Willa T., was second, with W. L. McCue's Little Duke third in the seven-horse field.

Betagain was first to show at the quarter-mile mark, with Willa T. close up. At the head of the stretch Betagain quit, Kentucky Green coming from far back to overtake the tiring leaders. Little Duke came with a rush in the final strides.

The winner, paying $15.40 straight, covered the 6 furlongs in 1:13 3-5.

A final meeting to effect permanent organization of the Prince Georges County Basket Ball League will be held tonight at 7:30 o'clock at the National Guard Armory in Hyattsville.

Plans will be made to start play Monday night at the armory. Seven teams have indicated intentions to join the loop. South Carolina Terps' Guest Tonight

Invaders Slight Choices; Guckeyson to Return to Lineup.

SOUTHERN CONFERENCE basket ball comes bouncing back to College Park tonight in the guise of a game between Maryland and South Carolina. The tip-off will be at 8 o'clock, with Carolina a slight favorite.

Gracing Maryland's starting lineup will be Bill Guckeyson, who apparently has definitely established himself as a regular in the eyes of Coach Burt Shipley. Guckeyson's sparkling play virtually won the Ohio State game for the Terps last week, and he undoubtedly would have helped against West Virginia Wednesday night.

But for some unexplainable reason Shipley held him on the sidelines while Waters, Buscher, et al., struggled gallantly but futilely to check the Mountaineers' mad flight. For Ed Daly and "Ike" Rabbitt, the West Virginia game was their last. Shipley dropped them from the squad when obliged to reduce it to nine men.

Headley Continues.

Coleman Headley, who threatened to abandon basket ball for track earlier in the season, is still plying his trade at guard and from all indications will be there for some time to come. Headley is fast and a willing worker, and his play is a decided asset to the team.

Maryland's line-up tonight probably will find Guckeyson and Al Waters at forward; Vic Willis, center; Andorka and Buscher, or Keller and Headley, guards. Shipley is dissatisfied with the work of Andorka and Buscher thus far, and is dividing the work between them.

Little is known of the Gamecocks, but Coach A. W. Norman usually turns out well-drilled teams that win their share of games.

Foreign Bond Buying Drops $465,000,000

Role of United States as Credit Power Comes to Standstill.

By Rader Winget.

New York, Jan. 3 (AP).—The United States last year purchased $465,000,000 less in foreign securities than the amount repurchased in the American market by foreign interests, it was shown today in a survey of American investments abroad.

Net foreign investments by the United States, after deduction of refunds, repatriation and repurchases, in 1933 was $156,915,000, in 1932 $116,055,850 and nearly $2,000,000,000 in 1929, the survey showed.

"Examination of statistics relative to America's foreign investments during the past three years shows that the role of the United States as a creditor power has virtually come to a standstill," said Max Winkler, head of the American Council of Foreign Bondholders, Inc., who conducted the eleventh annual survey.

Heaviest refunding last year came from Europe, where the total was $470,655,665, against $112,118,000 in new investments. Canadian refunding totaled $60,000,000, against new investments of $115,300,000. South America was $28,537,750 in refundings, against $32,033,975 in new investments; Central America, $650,000, against $150,000; Australasia, $150,353,000, against $600,000, and miscellaneous refundings amounted to $15,000,000, against no new investments under that heading.

America's stake in foreign countries at the start of 1935 was estimated by Winkler at $16,250,000,000, the third consecutive decline. Most of the investment was in Canada, $4,592,000,000, and next was Europe, with $4,523,000,000; South America, $3,023,000,000; Central America, $3,000,000,000; Australasia, $674,000,000, and miscellaneous, $425,000,000.

Walt Mason, Himself

James Bosworth ranks among the great, but while he did his chores, men used to say, "That brainless skate is quite the worst of bores." He followed Johnson through the streets and up and down the stairs, and made his note, "He bought some beets and prunes and Belgian hares." Forever saying silly things, and quick to laugh and cry; and Johnson's words had barbs and stings, when he would make reply. Well, Boswell died, and Johnson died, the cheap man and the great; and if Sam Johnson's fame is wide, 'tis Boswell pays the freight. Poor Boswell—men rejected him, the clown, the worthless sham; but countless gents are reading Jim, where one is reading Sam. And Cruden, of "Concordance" fame, had wheels within his head; men said his conduct was a shame, they scorned the life he led. "He isn't fit to be at large," so ran the village talk; "he should be promptly placed in charge of some asylum doc." And for a time he was on deck in one dark, cold caboose, and made the keepers wish to heck the law would turn him loose. He used to fall in love with girls and pester them to death, until the gray showed in their curls, and sobs disturbed their breath. If there was any crazy stunt that someone ought to land, old Cruden barged up to the front and took the job in hand. But in sane moments he would rise and write a page or so of that great book the preachers prize, the greatest help they know. Perhaps we, too, may know some gent who seems a total loss, but who will make a high ascent and put big things across.

Orchard Fight To End in Sale

Disputed Mount Jackson Estate Scheduled for Auction.

Winchester, Jan. 3 (Spl.). Turkey Knob Orchards, Inc., the center of court battles since 1923, when C. E. Gudebrod brought suit for salaries allegedly due him, has been advertised for sale at auction on Tuesday, January 22, at 11 o'clock. The sale will be held in the famous orchard near Mount Jackson.

The sale will probably be the final chapter in a case which has dragged through the courts for 12 years, accumulating 15 typewritten volumes of testimony, each of about 500 pages.

Herbert S. Larrick and Burr P. Harrison, of this city; Judge F. S. Tavenner, of Woodstock, and E. W. Kemp, of New York, all interested in the various legal aspects of the suit, are special commissioners.

Gudebrod's suit was brought after the death of Artemus Ward, owner of the orchard, by whom the complainant was employed as manager. The suit finally was disposed when Judge Philip Williams handed down a decree listing about $500,000 indebtedness against the estate with approximately $360,000 in prior liens. In the same decree he ordered sale of the orchards and settlement of debts according to a schedule prepared by the court.

Gudebrod was granted an appeal, but no stay in the proceedings of the lower court was ordered. For several years the orchards have been leased by Senator H. F. Byrd and T. B. Byrd, his brother.

Society Woman's Death Probe Ends

Baltimore, Jan. 3 (AP).—A coal miner's detonating cap exploding in the family furnace was advanced today definitely as a solution of the mysterious wounding and killing of Miss Katherine Briscoe, Baltimore society woman.

Dr. Robert W. Wood, professor of experimental physics at the Johns Hopkins University, said he was satisfied that the metal pellet, which struck the 51-year-old woman as she was stoking the furnace, was a fragment of a miner's detonating cap. He had tentatively advanced this theory Tuesday, the day after Miss Briscoe's death.

His definite conclusion was given to the Briscoe family and Miss Briscoe's brother-in-law, Rear Admiral William G. Pye, said he was satisfied with it and that any further investigation was improbable.

On the Air Today

By Katherine Smith.

NAMES make radio news today. The biggest one for N. B. C. is Beatrice Lillie, beginning a series of weekly broadcasts tonight, WRC at 9. She starts off with a bang and a blast, directed mainly at Park avenue and Main street stuffed shirts, their silly vanities and practices. Satire reigns supreme when Miss Lillie is concerned.

Burlesques of a bedtime story, a flustered lady shopper (remember the Christmas rush?), a foreign celebrity who would rather swim the ocean than take a boat, are among the lady's contributions. Musically speaking, her tunes include such titles as "Britannia Rules the Waves, or Up, Girls, and At 'Em."

Lee Perrin makes his first "mike" appearance as leader and actor. Both he and his band will "stooge" for Miss Lillie. Orchestral numbers include "I Know That You Know," "I'd Like to Dunk You in My Coffee."

N. B. C. had to give the star of the evening a studio that was new to her. Said she: "Words can not describe how terribly I felt when I learned I could not get back to my old studio. But the new one is even more delightful, and I am certain that Flapdoodle will be very happy." Flapdoodle is her pet canary.

C. B. S.'s big names are Kay Francis and George Brent, heard on "Hollywood Hotel" program. M. C. Dick Powell introduces Jane Williams, Ted Fio-Rito and orchestra. WJSV at 9:30.

Two more fine C. B. S. features are: Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra at 3:15, and Carla Romana, pianist, at 9:45 this morning. The symphonic program includes the "Academic Festival" overture of Brahms, following with Brahms' Fourth Symphony. Rondo from "Til Eulenspiegel," by Richard Strauss, the Nocturne and Scherzo from Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream," the Scherzo from "Sorcerer's Apprentice," and "Cappriccio Espagnol," by Rimsky Korsakoff complete the program.

Miss Romana plays an all Brahms program including the first movement from the F Minor Sonata, "Scherzt" and two waltzes.

ANOTHER name. Irene Rich comes in over WMAL at 8 o'clock. The play is "Retribution" in which a woman spy escapes from Italy by plane, is smashed up behind the enemy's lines, falls in love with the army officer she's assigned to do dirt. Then comes the problem of love versus duty, with, it is hoped, a happy ending.

Nice to hear that Miss Rich's contracts brings her each week for the next 13.

If your taste runs toward the theater, 10 o'clock, WRC and the First Nighter program introduces "She Always Gets Her Man," romance of show business. Feminine movie scout goes in pursuit of a New York musical comedy sensation.

Night clubs, radio and theaters borrow each others stars. Today, at a local theater, N. T. G. initials long associated with radio pioneering brings his Gotham stage show. Niles T. Granlund shifted several years ago from radio to the night club field. Is best known for productions at the Paradise Cafe. Highlight is Jay C. Flippen, a personality radio fans will recognize.

FIRST sponsored program over entire ABS network presents a ringside seat at the Olympia Arena, Detroit. Max Baer and Babe Hunt will put on an exhibition fight. Also a match between Buddy Baer, young and promising brother of the champion, and Jack O'Doud. Tony Wakeman, ABS sports announcer, will give a blow by blow description of the rounds. Sheduled for 10 WOL.

Last week brought in a flock of telephone calls at the station. This was due to the absence of the usual Friday fight broadcast. And strangely enough, nine out of ten calls were from women. Maternal instinct maybe. However, tonight's show should be good, for Baer fans either in fights or cinema.

Extra dial twists for today: Child Welfare Conference with prominent speakers. . . . NBC's music appreciation period illustrating tonal qualities of oboe, English horn and bassoon. . . . Henry A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, on the Farm and Home hour, summarizes trends in American agriculture and the necessity of policy reversal of farming is to gain a continuing adjustment. . . . Stuyvesant String Quartet with a program of chamber music, WOL 2:30.
